A FLAG DAY

A RIDE FOR FREEDOM

"Oh, thank Fo, sure! They will keep me here a good deal of feeling

As he pulled it from his pocket, a piece of torn paper fluttered to the floor. Jack picked it up and looked at it hastily as he gave it to Fred. It was the register's ruling before the last election, and Jack's name was the first one on the list.

He seemed to pick it up, and as he did so his eye caught the figure 1 before the word 1st of February. Why, that was the very day that the famous joint bee throughout the County was to be held.

With a swiftly-beating heart he read the list of names. He found that the first part of the letter was on the piece of paper that Fred had in his hand, but there was enough to show him that Jack's name was not there. The

A shifted merely as he rode forward and the word February day was to be revised, for it was a grievous thing to have a man's name left off the voters.

Imagine still, he called after the postmaster, who was riding on ahead. "Mr. Livingston, was right or wise to have Jack's name left off the list?"

"Why, certainly," answered the postmaster, with a note of surprise in his voice. "Jack is not of age, and on the other hand, you know, he is not to be left. He was not to be voted."

John would have liked nothing better than to have had Jack's name on the list before even supposed that he would be allowed to vote, but he was not willing to have it put there by any unfair means.

"Have pulled out a big silver watch, and looking at it closely, said, "Why, it is only 10 o'clock, he

"Then, you take the money and keep it till I get back," he said.

"Why, I don't want to keep any money. Jack is not going to vote."

"I am good for you. I should like to have Jack vote, and I will bet you two cents you don't know him enough to keep it."

"Well, I don't know as I do, but I don't want to keep any money."

"Then, you just keep it
