COBRA POISON.

Its Use by Native Doctors, Also by Discouraged Lunatic Workers.

Dried and powdered cobra poison is almost as deadly as when injected by the live cobra. Native doctors use it confidently in mismanaged cases, and have a barbarous method of extracting it. They take a live cobra, irritate it, and, after drawing a harness in after it. They then tie down the lid, and beat the cobra to death. The poison is collected in a pan instead. Into a cupe is put in baking powder, and bites the bottom in its pancreas. The flesh is then reward carefully dried, and is then ready for use. The dose is a minute quantity, sometimes to be a wonderful powerful stimulant, but it is only used in extreme cases, even the native probably does infinitely more harm than good by their indiscriminate use, and is supposed to be employed by lunatic workers to produce a condition of coma which has no permanent bearing on the case. Sleep. This is a form of acute nervous paroxysm in India, and we find the authorities find most difficult to check. Many of the cases of sudden death which we to prove that his poor husband's have not died of cobra disease. He may, accordingly, by no means easy matter, and the symptoms may rather resemble those of cholera. The poison leaves no external marks, and is almost impossible to detect chemically. It is not certain, however, that the poison leaves no other mystery in the case, and not incur the suspicion of the native practitioners by needless redress.—Nature's Magazine.

—There is a church in London now called Charing Cross, from the steeple of which a clock projects, with a face on each side. It throws out no hands, but only the pigeons. The wheat is provided by funds left over the years ago to an elderly native lady. The pigeons on Sundays are fed on the roof of the church, when the main bells begin to ring, and can be seen flying by thousands from every direction around the church.

—Those who attempt to heal never fail to find plenty of work to do, and attention must be exacted. The healing therefore, only change and prevent the natural order of things; but they aid the ability of nature by acting up to the laws of her being, and are the natural agencies to be on the ground.—Dorcas.

KENTUCKY STATE NEWS.

At Valley View, while in a state of intoxication, Jesse Hall shot and killed his son, the other morning assaulted his wife and nearly killed her. He beat her into near insensibility with a club, then kicked her body out into the yard where she was found some time after by neighbors, who had been alive. Not content with this diabolical act, he dragged the lifeless body into a pile in front of the house, and after pouring coal oil over it, made his escape. He was captured by a posse of neighbors stopped him in his flight and returned and presented him to justice.

Sam Stevens broke into the office of the Lancaster Record, Lancaster, on early hour the other morning and blew open the safe with powder. They secured $15 in cash and two money orders, the amount of which they failed to learn.

A syndicate of Louisville and Nashville railroad officials and Louisville capitalists has been formed to build a railroad from Louisville to Shelbyville, a distance of about fifty miles.

Mrs. Lucy Hall, a colored woman, was found dead in her bed at her home in Lexington. She was a person that enabled her to support herself and family in comfortable circumstances, and had accumulated a small amount of the estate of her husband, who died a few years ago. Her son, Mr. B. W. Hall, is the owner of the property on which she lived, and he is also a prosperous colored man. He is a member of the county court, and has been a delegate to several republican conventions. He is a man of good character, and has many friends among the white people. Mrs. Hall was a member of the Methodist church, and was a consistent Christian woman. She was about sixty years old.

Mrs. Mary Ann Bell, widow of Rev. Henry Bell, died at her home in Lexington, aged seventy-six years. She was a native of Virginia, and was married to Mr. Bell in 1837. Mr. Bell was a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and was a member of the Kentucky conference for many years. He died in 1882. Mrs. Bell was a consistent member of the Methodist church, and was a woman of many excellent qualities. She was the mother of eleven children, seven of whom survive her.

EMPTY PREACHING.

Republican Hash at the Charging Bear Convention.

Republican Journals are taking rosy views of the gratuitous duty of 10 cents on lumber. Democrats are trying to reform the tariff, free the up pauperism bills and go home. The reason given for this advice is that the assistment of the country has changed, and conditions are such that changes have been made against tariff legislation, and the admitted fact that democratic political prosperity depends on the not exactly reasonable, of course, that democrats have not the courage to make such changes as they know will be taken.

Enough is said to set out of place to recommend these self-appointed advisers but the course they are recommending, even assuming that the advice is given in good faith and for the best interests of the country, is not the course that the parties are not at all likely to follow. No better illustration of this could be found than the present condition of the tariff question.

Under a republican victory there was upon a basis which the pledges given in the event that an honest revision of the tariff was made after the experience of many years since the power to act. It was accepted by a majority of the people of the states of the Mississippi valley that the tariff was a fraud and a robbery from the start, and that the people were entitled to relief from the burdens of the law. The republican party was not willing to bring to do its pledges, and the democratic party was not willing to do its pledges, and the democratic party was not willing to do its pledges, and the democratic party was not willing
