Moorefield phone project underway

Southern Bell announced today that construction has started on a new telephone route to serve the farm families who live in the Moorefield road area. The construction of this project started in November and the installation of the new lines is expected to be completed late in February, barring bad weather, and it will be placed in service shortly after that.

The telephone company will place 16,000 ft. of aerial cable, three miles of rural distribution wire and 30 miles of steel wire to serve 68 farm families in the Moorefield area. The cable and rural wire will be placed along the Moorefield road and the steel wire will be extended on the existing route and also serves Farmers Rural Electric Cooperative Corporation will be used.

Clyde Watts, local manager for the Telephone Company, said the cost of this project will be more than $25,000.00.

Mr. Watts said that this is another step in giving telephone service to farm families in Kentucky and is another part of the $26,000,000 expansion program that Southern Bell has scheduled in Kentucky for 1956.
