Two of three young Nicholas County men arrested in connection with a break-in of the John Arnstrith store at Rudds Mill Bourbon county pleaded guilty Monday morning to charges of storehouse breaking and were ordered held in the Bourbon county grand jury under $500 bond.

Burley growers to hear about poundage plan

Tobacco farmers of Nicholas County are invited to attend a county-wide tobacco meeting to be held Thursday night, Feb. 23 at 7:00 p.m. at the courthouse, Harold Letton, Farm Bureau president has announced.

The meeting is held in conjunction with a series of meetings to be held in a 21 county area to discuss a poundage and acreage control plan for tobacco. At a meeting held Friday in Lexington, Harold Letton and John Hamilton, representing the Nicholas County Farm Bureau, were asked to present this plan to the farmers of Nicholas County and report back to compare their findings with representatives of the other counties.

The plan has these merits:

1. A farmer producing below his poundage allotment for two years will have the opportunity of reserving bowing years.

2. Fertilizer costs probably would be reduced.

3. More efficient planning would be possible from year to year.

4. Such a program would control diseases effectively.

The plan as presented used a base, two-acre allotment to explain how the credit—debit plan would work, but the present tobacco determining formula would be used to set overall quotas.

After its first year, the tobacco produced the preceding year will determine the next year's quota. Setting each farm's per-acre quota is the plan's "knottiest problem." Three methods were suggested: past five-year farm acreage, an average of the three highest years of the past five, or the farm, state and county averages obtaining a third each.

Poundage plan in brief

The following illustrates how the debit-credit method of controlling burley production would operate over a four-year period for a farm with a two-acre base. The method was explained yesterday at a meeting of farm bureau leaders from 21 counties.

Needless fertilizer costs eliminated when farmers use soil test laboratory

It's time for us to sample our cropland says B. C. Clark, president of the Nicholas County Soil Conservation Association. Mr. Clark, along with directors James Lowe, Lee Roper, Jr., Robert Lee, Ed Clay Dayton, Howard Allison, Jr., S. R. Barbee, Howard Sidle, and Sam Smith have arranged for farmers in Nicholas County to have soil tests run this year at a cost of 50¢ per sample.

Non-Profit Organization

Mr. Clark states that the association is a non-profit organization dedicated to help farmers determine their fertilizer needs and save them the extra expense of applying fertilizers not needed to produce a crop. Although over fertilizing is expensive the lack of proper fertilizer is much more expensive, he stated.

Nicholas County farmers used 1666 tons of fertilizer during the period January 1-June 30, 1955 at a cost of $101,418.23 according to the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station's Department of Feed and Fertilizer. Of this amount, 1291 tons were of recommended grades. The expense of low analysis fertilizers and use of such materials is a very expensive experiment for a farmer to without.

The use of the soil testing laboratory can eliminate this expense to all farmers, yet only about one third of the farmers used the service of determining the amount of fertilizer and the materials to use.

Sampling the soil is a very simple task and quickly done. It is an important part in determining the fertility needs of soil. The University of Kentucky College of Agriculture's Extension Leaflet 139, "How to Take a Good Soil Sample" may be secure, from the county agent's office. Soil samples also should be delivered to the county agent's office at the earliest convenient time. Though the test he can determine the amount and kind of fertilizers to be used on specific crops. Early purchasing of fertilizers will enable farmers to get the analysis recommended and prevent having to except undesirable expensive analyses.

In an effort to promote the

program of soil testing, the local Farm Bureau will pay for all soil test on land to be seeded to alfalfa. Success in seeding alfalfa depends largely on the proper treatment of soil prior to seeding.

Without the test, no one can determine the amount or kind to use on any crop. The crop will either starve for nutrition or money will be spent for nutrient not needed. Most crops require a balance of nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium. With tobacco it is exceptionally important to have the elements balanced. Mr. Clark says that further information, maybe secured from the county agent. He firmly believes that money spent for fertilizers should be only that needed. Money spent for unnecessary amounts or poor analysis may be used for other farm improvements.
