gene Furnis be increased to $250.00 effective Sept. 1.

On motion of Coatney, seconded by Frey, resolution to split city's advertising was brought up for discussion. Resolution having been tabled at previous meeting. After much discussion a motion by Smoot, seconded by Coatney ordered that all newspaper advertising by the city be divided equally as possible between the two "local" newspapers, without running the same advertising in both papers at the same time.

Resignation of Will J. Greene as officer on March 3, 1959, from his position of city clerk-treasurer accepted on motion of Frey, seconded by Coatney. Effective date, Dec. 7, 1959, ending his third two year term. Meeting was adjourned.

Smith gives pay into promotion programs against their will. The program that is currently being voted on by sheep producers in this county is a compulsory check-off. Once the required percentage of producers vote to continue the check-off for another three years, individual farmers have no choice but to pay the money out of their wool incentive checks."

The local Farm Bureau president explains that if farmers vote "No" in the current referendum, which is being conducted by a mail ballot, it will have no effect on the overall government wool payment program. Under the Wool Act of 1954, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to enter into an agreement with a private promotion organization to finance a wool and lamb promotion program through a compulsory check-off. It does not require him to do so.

After a referendum of producers three years ago, he did enter into such an agreement with the American Sheep Producers Council, which has since spent more than $8-million of sheep producers' money in trying to promote the sale of wool and lamb.

Farm Bureau is not attempting to tell sheep producers how they should vote on this referendum," says Mr Smith. "We believe that our farmers are capable of making up their own minds. We are pointing out, however, that the official policy of the Kentucky Farm Bureau, as adopted by the county delegates at the last state convention, is against such a compulsory check-off program."

a high rate of speed, Clark said, and the patrolman was pursuing Wells when the accident occurred.

Sheriff John Anderson said the car traveled 670 feet after striking a mailbox post in front of the home of Marion Hunter.

Wells was treated at the Nicholas County hospital and was then taken to the Lexington hospital. Attendants at the St. Joseph hospital said the condition of Wells was serious, Monday night.

Blue Licks loses to Mt. Olivet

Mt. Olivet will play Tollesboro next Sunday night at Wald Park in the Kentucky Valley League finals as the result of their 6-4 win Sunday over Blue Licks.

Ronnie Workman and Wendell Workman each went four and five innings respectively on the mount for the victors while J. P. Dice caught. Each Workman player had nine strikeouts. They gave one base on balls and hit one batter.

For the Blue Licks team, Taylor started and saw eight innings before being relieved by Leet and D. Hillock in the eighth. P. Hillock was behind the plate.

Humphreys had a double for the losers only extra-base hit. Blue Licks had seven strikeouts and gave up seven bases on balls and one hit batter.

Demos to launch fall campaign Saturday

Democrats from all sections of Kentucky will converge on Bardstown, Saturday, September 19, for a huge meeting which will formally launch their fall election campaign for state offices.

The meeting will start at 2:00 p.m., C.D.T., at the Bardstown high school, which has a large athletic field and gymnasium seating 3,000.

Congressman John C. Watts of Nicholasville, who is Democratic State campaign chairman, in announcing the campaign opening said the high school was chosen because it provided facilities for use in either good or bad weather.

Bardstown was selected because of its central location and its traditional Kentucky atmosphere, being the site of My Old Kentucky Home.

The principal speakers will be Bert T. Combs, Democratic candidate for Governor, and Wilson W. Wyatt, nominee for lieutenant governor. Also on the speakers' platform will be the other Democratic candidates for state office, members of congress and other party dignitaries.

The attendance is expected to run into the thousands. Music will be provided by perhaps a dozen bands.

Democratic State campaign headquarters in Louisville said that the dates and sites for other major meetings would be announced later.

COMMENT

Kay T. Fisher

Comment on arriving home from the annual vacation, "We went on one of those all-expense tours, and thats exactly what it was."

. . . . .

We don't need an Economist to advise us that there is an upswing of prices, just shop for anything. As for myself I haven't caught up with the last upswing.

The strange quietness in the neighborhood is due to the fact that the children are again in school. You will notice that the pew and quiet is shattered daily at 3 p.m.

. . . . .

If you pay taxes you are in the wealthy class—you have to be.

THE GRACE OF GOD

By Eloise Cooper Pittman

"THEY spotted the beggar at the corner of First and Main: a frowsy man with black glasses leaning against the First National Bank building, hawking lead pencils held in a battered felt hat.

As she started rummaging in her purse John caught brusquely at her hand, his voice as frosty as the October morning. "Don't be a sap, honey—that get paid only has a bigger bank balance than ours. I used to fall for all these sad sacks' stories—and what did it ever get me?"

Margaret, sorting through dimes and quarters for change, let her lip. "Good lord, man, do you have to be paid for every little human kindness? And anyway, you'll get your health haven't you?"

"And a two-bit job with a company that's due for bankruptcy any day." He tossed her the change.

As they reached the mendicant Margaret fumbled her purse defiantly, whipped out a half dollar and extended it into the displeasable hat. The beggar drew a lean hand through thinning hair. "Thank you, ma'am—take a pen."

"Fellah, we don't need any more pencils," John grr-wled. "Oh, grab one anyway," the man in tatters insisted. "I don't take your money for nothing. Bet, I might bring you good luck."

Jamming her husband's frown, Margaret picked up one of the little yellow cylinders. "Good luck to you."

"Thank you, ma'am," the wheezed one repeated.

When Jackie and Susan had been shooed off to bed, Margaret drew the pencil from her purse and studied it, frowning. "Funny thing—about that beggar, I mean. He called me 'ma'am' before I heard my voice. How did he know I was a woman?"

"Well, now, what do you think?" John said harshly.

The evening still wasn't far advanced when John rather grumpily answered the door chimes to admit a dapper guest in his mid-thirties. The caller smiled, "Mr. Carlisle me, fellah? I'm Bill Hoover, reporter for the Times-Herald. Remember, I know . . . Mac? I got your pencil?"

John looked blank, but Margaret's eyes narrowed. "Pen, you mean that one we—uh—had on the street corner this morning? Yes, I've got it here somewhere."

Hoover squinted at the pencil. "Well, congrats, fellas. Do you anyway, lady, this hunk of graphite isn't worth a nickel—it's worth a hundred bucks, which I'm prepared to give you for it right this minute."

John clenched his fists. "Now wait a minute, fellah—don't you think you can pull any of your cheap newspaper gimmicks in this house."

"Keep your sanctified shirt on, Governor," grinned the reporter. "Your wife happens to be the winner of a newspaper jackpot.

John flushed, now thoroughly confused. "But what's the angle?" he demanded. "Why pull a fool stunt like this?"

Bill Hoover chuckled. "Well, y'see, I made a bet w.' my boss, the city editor, Old Pickle Puss—we talk him behind his back. I said I could prove people are as charitable today as they were thirty years ago when that old crab was my age. So I hid behind that awful blind-man's getup and peddled my pencils. No one got wise, so my old crab has been convincing. I couldn't conscientiously keep the pencil money, so I rigged up that jackpot deal."
