Kay's Kitchen

By Kay Fisher

Since I've had a bit more time to find recipes using pasta, I'm pleased to have some really different one this week.

The next two recipes are from "San Francisco La' la Carte" by the Junior League of San Francisco.

GREEN NOODLE CASSEROLE

1 8-oz. package green or spinach noodles
1 lb. shelled, deveined and cooked shrimp, or crab meat, or diced cooked chicken
1 bunch green onions, chopped
¼ cup diced green pepper
¾ cup mayonnaise
¾ cup sour cream
¼ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 cup grated sharp cheddar cheese

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Butter a two-quart casserole and set aside. Cook noodles in salted boiling water until just barely al dente (cooked through but still firm). Drain thoroughly and place in the bottom of the prepared casserole. Place shrimp (or meat), onions and green pepper on top. Combine mayonnaise, sour cream and Worcestershire sauce and pour over shrimp and noodles. Sprinkle top with grated cheese. Bake 30 minutes. Serves 4-6.

ARTICHOKE SAUCE FOR PASTA

"This is good over spaghetti and is pretty as a side dish. Equally lovely as a sauce over veal chops. To puree or not to puree is up to the cook."

2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
1 pkg. frozen artichoke hearts, thawed and chopped
3 medium tomatoes, peeled and chopped
1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley
1 teaspoon sweet basil
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
Parmesan cheese, freshly grated

Heat oil in heavy skillet and cook onion and garlic until transparent. Add artichoke hearts, tomatoes, parsley, basil, salt and pepper. Cook slowly, stirring occasionally, for about one hour or until thickened. Serve over pasta of your choice. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese.

Just remember that pasta is very versatile. It can be combined with almost any other food — as a body to soups, coated with sauces and mixed with meat, fish, vegetables, or cheese. The sauce may be as light as a coating of butter, cream and cheese, or a thick and meaty tomato sauce.

Most shapes of pasta can be used interchangeably to vary the appearance of a dish. As a rule twisted and curved shapes such as wheels and shells are used with meaty sauces; fine ribbons or noodles for creamy, cheesy sauces; wide bands of lasagna for layered casseroles, and manicotti shells for filling.

Schwann Catalog's 35th year brings RIAA award to founder

Recording Industry Cites William Schwann and

The Schwann Catalog as "Timeless"

The founder of the Schwann Record and Tape Guide, William Schwann, former Carlisle resident, has received the RIAA's Honorary Gold Recording Award in recognition of the catalog's 35th anniversary.

(Mr. Schwann's father was pastor of the Carlisle Christian Church from 1926 to 1930. Bill was a graduate of Carlisle High School in 1936.)

Presenting the award to Mr. Schwann was Stanley M. Gortikov, president of RIAA (Recording Industry Association of America), who cited him for bringing "a sense of order to a complex industry in codifying the sounds and products we create. Bill Schwann and the Schwann catalog are timeless."

The Schwann catalog is published by ABC Schwann Publications, Inc., a division of ABC Leisure Magazines, Inc., and ABC Publishing, which were represented at the ceremonies at the St. Botolph Club by Ronald Stuart, President of ABC Leisure Magazines; Steven I. Rosenbaum, Chairman of the Board and Publisher; and William Tynan, Associate Publisher.

When the first issue was published in October 1949 (as the Schwann Long Playing Record Catalog), it contained 96 pages with 6,000 listings on 11 different labels. Today, nearly 500 editions and 34 million copies later, the monthly 300-page-plus catalog lists more than 70,000 classical, pop and jazz recordings on LPs, cassette tapes, and Compact Discs on more than 800 labels. Since December 1983 it has been known as the New Schwann Record and Tape Guide. A special edition — The Schwann Artist Issue — that lists some 20,000 orchestras, conductors, soloists, etc., by performer was first published in 1953. It is now published every two years and is in its 11th edition.

By Dr. Robert F. Pretzsch, Optometrist

Choosing a Contact Lens Practitioner

Q. How do you find a qualified contact lens practitioner?

A. It is best to start by asking friends who wear contact lenses successfully about the optometrist who fit them. You can also telephone your local optometric association and ask for recommendations in your area.

Find out how experienced the practitioner is and whether or not he carries soft, hard, and gas permeable lenses manufactured by several different companies. Your best fit may not be the brand that is advertised on television.

Very often the optometrist himself will teach you how to insert and remove your new contact lenses. Just as often, that job may be left to an assistant. The assistant should be cordial, clean, patient, and careful when working with you. In addition to learning how to insert and remove your lenses, you should be instructed in how to care for your lenses and provided with a starter kit for doing so. Patient education is an integral part of a successful contact lens fitting practice.

Be sure that your optometrist can be reached in emergencies, or makes provisions for emergency coverage. Be certain that he will see you at frequent intervals after the initial fitting, and that he will try other lenses on you if the initial pair do not prove comfortable.

Highschool Athletic Association proposes cutbacks and changes

The Kentucky High School Athletic Association has proposed cutbacks in the number of regular-season football and basketball games and other changes in athletic programs in order to limit the loss of school time because of athletic practice or games.

The recommendations came at a joint meeting of the KHSAA Board of Control and the Kentucky State Board of Education January 3 in Frankfort.

The two groups also discussed the possibility of scheduling state high school basketball tournaments during spring breaks but reached no conclusions. The KHSAA board agreed to study the scheduling issue further and make a recommendation to the State Board of Education, possibly by the education board's March meeting.

Supt. of Public Instruction Alice McDonald said the two groups had "made some great strides" in working out common problems. Changes are needed "so we won't be sending mixed signals to students" by allowing athletics to infringe upon teaching, she said.

"What we're after is an overall feeling in Kentucky that academics does rule the school day," McDonald said. "We are looking, not to hurt athletics, but to help academics."

KHSAA Commissioner Tom Mills said some of the proposals, including those related to the shortening of the football and basketball seasons, would require changes in the association's constitution or bylaws. Those changes would have to be approved by the KHSAA delegate assembly, which meets in April, he said.

Mills noted that the KHSAA board is already on record as supporting the six-hour instructional day called for by McDonald and the State Board of Education. The recommendations being made by the KHSAA board "will show that we are in agreement with your efforts and that we support you 100 percent," he said.

He said the proposed cutbacks in the number of regular-season games would allow schools to schedule most of football games on Friday or Saturday nights. This change would resolve a concern previously expressed by board members about the scheduling of games on nights before school days, he said.

The KHSAA recommendations would cut the number of regular-season football games, including pre-season bowl games, from 11 to 10. For schools playing football, the number of regular-season basketball games would be cut from the present 24 to 20. Schools that do not play football would be allowed to play 24 regular-season basketball games instead of the present 20.

Under the proposed rule changes, organized football practice in pads could not begin before Aug. 1. Players would be required to have five days of practice without pads before that time to become acclimated to heat conditions. No organized basketball practice would be permitted before Oct. 15.

The KHSAA board also proposed a rule change that would give the commissioner and board authority to suspend a coach, player or member school for violations of sportsmanship. This would permit the association to penalize the responsible individual instead of the whole school program, Mills said.

The two-boards also discussed the issue of "red-shirting," or holding back students to give them more years of athletic play or allow them to gain maturity before playing.

James Ratcliffe, chairman of the State Board of Education, asked the KHSAA board to consider a suggested rule change that would make red-shirting an accreditation violation and to report to the state board at its March meeting.

Members of the two boards also discussed issues related to player eligibility and certification requirements for coaches but made no formal recommendations.

At its meeting on Thursday, the State Board of Education agreed to create a committee made up of members of both boards and representatives of other athletic groups to study and make recommendations on issues raised at the joint meeting and to review the KHSAA bylaws.

In another athletics-related action the board upheld a hearing officer's report declaring Maria Gentry eligible to play on the Whitesburg High School basketball team. The KHSAA board had ruled that she was ineligible to play because of an alleged recruiting violation.

The education board also approved a recommendation that the KHSAA amend its bylaws so the person accused of recruiting could be held responsible, rather than the player.

Gov. Collins names self to top post

Governor Martha Layne Collins has assumed the additional responsibilities of Secretary of Education and Humanities as she continues her work to improve education across Kentucky.

Governor Collins told members of her Council on Educational Reform on Jan. 11 that "nothing means more to me than seeing that the people of this state — all the people of this state — have the chance to enjoy the expanded opportunities that better schools will give us."

She commended members of the council for their hard work in contributing valuable ideas to education, "the most important cause facing the Commonwealth...This is an outstanding group of men and women."

The Council presented its final report of recommendations for educational reform to the Governor. It includes a recognition that good teachers are the foundation of good schools, that students should be doing more writing and that the state needs more effective continuing education programs for teachers.

"I intend to use your report as a basis for fashioning a legislative program," Governor Collins said. "I am optimistic about what we can do."

The Governor said she is going to ask members of the council, as well as teachers, principals, superintendents, school board members and parents "to look beyond their own particular interest in education toward what is best for Kentucky."

"I have great faith in the people of Kentucky," she said. "They are proud people and once they set their mind to something they will not be denied."

She said that in assuming the additional role of Secretary of Education and Humanities, "I want to send a clear message to the people of Kentucky that I am dedicated to this important work."

The Governor said she will officially begin her statewide campaign for educational improvement later this month, reaching into each of the state's 120 counties.

Food prices edge upward

Food prices closed out the year on an uptick, increasing by 1.8 percent in December, according to the Kentucky Farm Bureau marketbasket food price survey.

Despite the hike, however, the food index remained at its second lowest level of 1984.

Forty selected food items cost an average $58.44 this month, compared to $58.33 in November. The two months registered the year's only price averages below the $60 mark, survey officials said.

Four of six food groupings experienced increases during December, paced by beef which rose 3.6 percent. Pork was up 1.8 percent, dairy products moved 2.1 percent higher and grain-based foods climbed 1.4 percent.

Fruits and vegetables went against the tide, declining by 2.4 percent during the month while poultry and eggs stayed even.

The December marketbasket marked the end of a year that has seen food prices hold steady against major increases. Much of the retail price stability was traceable to depressed farm prices, especially for grain and livestock.

Examples of this flat pricing trend are evident in comparison of this month's survey findings with those of December 1980, four years ago. The overall index stood at $48.17 that month, 1.3 percent below the current level. But many individual beef, pork, vegetable and dairy product prices are actually lower today than they were at the end of 1980.

Such staples as ground beef, bacon, eggs, milk and flour are all cheaper now than they were four years ago. On the up side, ice cream, potato chips and T-bone steaks have climbed during the period.

Paducah checked in with the lowest local marketbasket cost in December while Danville claimed the high mark. Overall, volunteers working through Kentucky Farm Bureau Women canvassed food prices in 8 Kentucky communities.

Prices in local averages were Shelbyville, 57.44; Cynthiana, 58.06; Morehead, 59.35; Elizabethtown, 60.91; Fort Ridge, 60.15; Falmouth, 61.47; Lexington, 62.32; Georgetown, 62.53; and Danville, 66.47.

At the farm level, grain prices continued their months-long plunge, as corn dropped 10 cents at the farm, some 75 cents a bushel below the level of a year ago. Soybeans fared even worse, with a near $6 quotation, a full $1.75 below last year's price.

Cattle prices on national markets picked up some steam over the past month reflecting a favorable supply situation and hog prices also improved.

The Department of Agriculture's farm price index was down nearly one percent in the agency's most recent monthly report. That left prices just 1.5 percent above a year ago, on average, indicating little price push from farm commodities on retail food costs in the near future.
