Legislative Perspective
By Representative Adrian Arnold

In anyone's estimation it must be said that the Kentucky lottery has been successful in its first year.

With five months more to go in its first year, the state has realized 63 million out of a total of 203,696,365.

Projected analysis on the state lottery estimates the state budget should receive as its share of the sales profit between $55.5 million and a high estimate of $111 million for the first year.

The distribution projection for the lottery was based on the assumption that 14.1 percent of the proceeds would be used for administrative costs, 48.8 percent for prizes and 37.1 percent to the state.

These first year figures can be positively compared to Iowa, that state started its lottery in 1986. Also a relatively rural state, Iowa realized $27 million its first year.

And, Washington state, which began its lottery in 1984 shared 71.88 million its first year.

Kentucky's neighbor, West Virginia, started its lottery in 1986 and received only 20 million of the profit.

While it is obvious that Kentucky has surpassed professional expectations, two budgetary factors must be kept in mind.

National lottery trends indicate that states do not realize as much profit the second and third years of the lottery.

And, then in the fourth year usually an improvement is detected.

Because of the uncertainty of lottery profits, state programs cannot solely depend on this revenue source.

Consequently, no matter how much legislators would like to depend upon the lottery for fund education reform it would be unrealistic to do so.

In addition, even the great success of Kentucky's lottery this year would not fund the overwhelming needs of education reform. Some education experts have set the education reform price tag at 300 to 600 million.

The General Assembly is charged, during the 1990 session, with deciding where in state government lottery proceeds will be earmarked.

This year only, 25 million is already set aside as mandated by the special lottery session of 1988, to pay for a Vietnam veterans bonus.

Much speculation has gone into where the lottery revenue should be placed. The governor has supported splitting the remaining dollars between senior citizens programs and pre-school educational and medical screening programs.

Because of the additional revenue demands coming from the Cabinet for Human Resources and the Corrections Cabinet, some state policy-makers support placing the proceeds in the General Fund to use as necessary.

Whatever the decision, the upcoming session will be one with revenue as the major emphasis.

Please feel free to contact me on this issue or any other that requires legislative attention.

Social Security Administration

Question: Why do some dependent families receive Social Security survivors benefits after the death of a parent and others do not?

Answer: Some reasons might be: the deceased parent was not insured under Social Security; the children exceed the age limit for benefits; or the surviving spouse earns too much to receive benefits.

If the deceased parent was insured under Social Security, survivors benefits are payable to the surviving spouse until the youngest child reaches age 16, and to the spouse at 60.

Surviving children who remain unmarried can receive benefits until they are age 18.

For children 18 or over who were disabled before age 22, benefits can continue as long as the disability lasts.

Eligibility for survivors benefits is also affected if there are significant earnings.

For those under 65 who earn over the 1989 limit of 6,480, 1.00- in benefits is withheld for each 2.00 wages which exceed that limit.

If you have any other questions about survivors benefits or eligibility for those benefits, call Social Security.

Someone there will be able to help you further.
