Main Street program to aid communities

Special to The Carlisle Mercury

In recent years many of Kentucky's central business districts have been threatened by economic decline.

Based on the need to preserve the economic vitality of the downtowns, along with their historic buildings and architecture, the Kentucky Heritage Council developed the Main Street Program to assist communities in the revitalization of their downtown commercial districts.

The Kentucky Main Street Program is based on a four point approach developed by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

The four components of the program are Organization, Promotion, Design and Economic Restructuring.

The overall goal is to encourage revitalization and economic development within the context of historic preservation.

The program has been successful in Kentucky's cities, both large and small, since it began in 1979 with six communities.

There are 28 towns participating in the Main Street effort.

Their participation requires considerable local commitment and financial support.

A Main Street manager administers the program locally through a volunteer board.

The Kentucky Heritage Council provides technical and design assistance, on-site visits, national consultants and grants funds.

Many cities have seen immediate improvements, but the program also established an effective organization that will continue to monitor and guide the revitalization efforts.

It is primarily a self-help program, locally administered and funded, with technical assistance and guidance provided by the Kentucky Heritage Council.

Main Street is an ingredient in the overall formula for improving the economy in the participating communities and our state as a whole because:

– it brings the community together to plan and focus, not only on the downtown, but on the future direction of the entire community;

– Main Street develops public-private partnerships, a necessary ingredient for successful economic development;

– Main Street builds a broad - based, strong foundation from which the community can build a long - term plan for determining and directing its future quality of life.

More low income Kentuckians are now eligible for program

More low income Kentuckians are eligible for a maternal and child nutrition program, thanks to annual federal government revisions in poverty levels, according to the Kentucky Department of Health Services.

On July 1, annual income limits for families applying for WIC, formally known as the Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children, increased between three and four percent.

For example, the annual maximum income for a family of four increased from $21,553 to $22,385.

Those families with incomes near the current maximums may become eligible, according to Peggy Kidd, state WIC director.

Almost 82,000 Kentuckians now receive WIC benefits monthly, Kidd said, as compared to 74,000 recipients in June 1988.

WIC provides nutrition education and specific foods high in protein, iron and vitamins A and C to low-income pregnant women, new mothers, infants and children up to five years of age who have health problems that can be improved through better nutrition.

The goal of WIC, which is funded by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, is to improve the health of children through proper nutrition.

For more information on WIC eligibility, Kentuckians can contact their local or district health department.

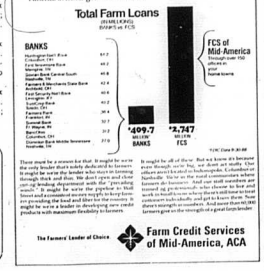
STRENGTH IN NUMBERS

Take the top ten farm lending banks in Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio and Tennessee. Even if you add together all the farm loans of these ten banks, they fall far behind Farm Credit Services of Mid-America in making loans to farmers.



There must be a reason for that. It might be service. It might be that we're solely dedicated to farmers. It might be using the lender who stays in farming through thick and thin. We don't open and close our ag lending department every time the economic winds. It might be we are together in Mid-America. It might be farmers supply to keep loans on providing the food and fiber for the country. It might be we are a leader in developing new credit products with maximum flexibility to farmers.

It might be all of the ... But we know it's because we're tough on ag, we don't act really. Our offices are located in Indianapolis, Columbus, Nashville. We're the rural communities' lender. We're the lender that's there when farmers need it the most, when they choose to live and work in rural America, when they want to be independent and when they want to be free to make farmers make decisions, and get to know them. Now there's strength in numbers. And more than 60,000 farmers go to the strength of a great farm lender.
