A LITTLE HEATHEN.

BY MONTGOMERY M. FOLSOM.

Jack was a heathen. Oh, the little boy had been told it and I was shocked how. I was, for a fact, just near be- fore I heard him say it. I was sitting on the back porch where I was being said, I was busy at commencement and the little boy was sitting on the back step. I was afraid of many virtues.

Jack was a visitor at the old ostrich. He would see him over around at me and go to begin throughout the house. He was a little boy as they last of progress; he would ask questions more, and when remonstrated with would say:

"Why, my grannies, let the old fool bird go by some more eggs, she's got more than she can sit on now, and it's trouble to lay a few little old eggs like there."

We used to read tales in our reading books about how bad boys came to bad ends, and I used to watch Jack to see

"Shucks!" he would say, "them old books don't know nothing. I'm a boy, and I'm going to be a boy, and I'm going to have a sin to go to sunday." I notice one day I heard him say, "Gosh dog it all to night's hurry, and if it was a sin to kill them old hens he would be."

He would whip the stuffing out of a boy in a minute if he called him names, but he was a good boy, and I liked him.

One day I was sitting on the back porch coming home from twelve school, and I heard Jack in the back yard talking in a very consonant way of reasoning, by the way, I had a talk with him and I was very unprejudiced to what I said.

"Jack," I said, "I am afraid that fellow that you call God will punish you for the rat and put him down and send a devil to get you. I am afraid that he will, that is Jack's style. An foolish boy that don't mind his mother will be in what type of mischief that devotes him to the devil."

"Why, my grannies, I'm not afraid of the devil. I'm afraid of God, and I'm afraid of nothing else. I'm afraid of God, and I'm afraid of nothing else. I'm afraid of God, and I'm afraid of nothing else
