federal level. "I don't think the state level is even close (to asking for a tax on tobacco). We can have crop replacement. We'd have to research it. The state of Kentucky has 56 to 58 extension agent vacancies . . . that's too many. Those people are valuable to your community."

Gun control was an issue he is clear about. "I'm against gun control except the military style. Every Tom, Dick and Harry should not be able to purchase automatic military style weapons like AK47s, Uzi's, any automatic firing weapons. I'm not against semi-automatic, like the .45 caliber policeman use or shotguns."

As to abortion, Nunnelley is pro-choice. "I'm not for government funding. I am also for parental consent."

And for his view on tax increases, he was short and to the point. "I'm not for any tax increase of any kind. I think the state should collect more of what's on the books. I'm not satisfied with the way we're doing it now."

Nunnelley's constituents can contact him by telephone. He also attends meetings to talk with people about concerns. "I'm interested in being re-elected," he explained.

James Stuart Thomas, Route 3 Box 175, Cynthiana, Ky., is a candidate for state senator. He was graduated with distinction from Harrison County High School and earned a bachelor of arts degree with departmental honors in political science from Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md. He received his law degree for the University of Kentucky College of Law and received the faculty cup for outstanding work and was selected as the standard for the law school.

He is a Cynthiana attorney now. "I've never run for office, so I'm not a politician," Thomas said. "I've always had an interest in government. In junior high I wrote an essay, "What America Can Expect From Me." So I think from that time on I wanted to participate in government."

Court agrees to rate hike

The Nicholas County Fiscal Court has agreed to increase the cost of trash accepted at the Nicholas County Recycling Center, Concrete Road.

Phillip Howard, plant manager, said Rumpke in Mt. Sterling raised their rates in January and that's where the Nicholas County Recycling Center takes non-recyclable trash.

The new rate is three bags for $1. Bags can hold up to 30 gallons of trash. The cost was previously four bags for $1.

There is a minimum $1 charge for any trash accepted.

The new charge for trash in pickup trucks, with trash level with the pickup bed, is $6. The previous rate was $5...

"We hope this increase offsets our expenses," Howard said.

Foremost is Thomas' attitude that represents the constituents. "We elect people to represent us and not represent their own views. Our job is to protect our interests and I will fight any attempts to tax tobacco. My job is to fight for tobacco. I don't smoke. But that's not my job. My job is to develop what's here."

Tax increases are definitely something Thomas is against. Hiring competent people and making hard decisions can help curb revenue problems, he said adding that the tobacco tax issue is on the federal level.

"Taxes are not the way to get revenue. That's money out of our pocket and money we're not able to spend. Manufacturers can't hire employees. You can't tax your way to prosperity," Thomas explained.

Crime is a concern of Thomas', but one needs to keep crime in perspective. "Violent crime is down two percent from 20 years ago."

Juvenile crime is Thomas' concern. "Juvenile crime does need stiffer penalties. We have penalties in place we just don't have certain penalties. We need to take penalties farther so crime is impaired."

Thomas believes in keeping penalties imposed on a regular basis. "There are penalties in place for juvenile crime. I think teenagers are acting more like adults in crime so they need to be dealt with at an adult level."

Thomas' view is that the hands of prosecutors are bound and that his emphasis is that juveniles should be treated as adults when intentional crimes are committed, not accidents.

The farming community is a particular interest of Thomas. "We should work to diversify."

Six to seven percent of the food Kentuckians eat is imported. "If we could produce the 100 percent of the food we consume, excluding citrus we can't grow, that would give us another 100,000 employees."

The tobacco industry was an interest in particular. Thomas would like to see ASCS offices, farmers co-op and other agricultural programs get together for long range planning. Perhaps farmers could find crops with which to replace tobacco.

"Farmers could apply their skills toward long range plans like growing pecan trees or Christmas trees. These things may not replace tobacco, but they need to be started now. We've got to be creative. There's lots of things being done worldwide. Kentucky is prime to start."

One of Thomas' ideas was to have farmers have their own brand of produce and even have it packaged. The middle man could be eliminated, too. "We need to work toward self-reliance. Farmers could make more money and consumers could save 50 percent on their food bill."

Thomas is also in favor of creating farmers like big businesses by giving farmers the same tax breaks and opportunities afforded to industry. "I don't know how feasible it is in regards to tobacco. We have 62,000 farms in Kentucky that grow tobacco, with an equivalent of 30,000 full-time employees and 80,000 in October when the season starts."

Small business is another interest. It's a positive thing when communities have large factories, yet the small businesses employ more people. Eighty percent of the nation works for small business," Thomas said.

It is also Thomas' view not to forget the industry already in our communities. "People here with plants have good ideas and we don't need to ignore them."

Thomas has traveled in every state in the United States except for Hawaii and Alaska. He still thinks Kentucky has the most to offer. "We should be working on making Kentucky a model for other states. I don't know of any business whose looking for number two."

Thomas' view on abortion was that he's anti-abortion. "I'm against abortion in general, and as a means of birth control."

Abortions due to rape and incest are tougher to consider. "They're on a personal level."

For Thomas, perspective on abortion comes from knowing people today can decide to terminate their own lives by refusing the use of life support machinery. Some people have stipulated they don't want to be on life support if they are in a vegetative state. There have been cases where a mother is told that a portion of the brain of a fetus is missing and the child will always be in a vegetative state. "I would understand a mother not wanting to put someone through that. It's hard to condemn abortion in those cases."

Thomas is against taxpayer paid abortion. "There are people who use abortions like birth control and they will abuse it."

People will be able to communicate with Thomas. He'd be glad to have town meetings to talk with the public. "When we elect someone, the operative word is 'represent' - it is not my job to substitute my opinion for what the constituents want."
