"But can you do anything?" asked the employer of the recent high school graduate.

Students enrolled in the Tech Prep Program at Nicholas County High School will be able to give an answer in the affirmative.

Supervised by Doug Bechanara, agriculture, Tech Prep endeavors to teach practical skills to high school students. Tech Prep emphasizes the kind of skills employers look for in job applicants. It is a program that's feasible for both those wanting to get a job immediately upon graduation and those wanting to continue their education.

I should have known I could count on the journalism students of Nicholas County High School to take The Mercury up on its offer for correspondents. A student in Jack Hayes class informed me Monday morning they were working on a sports story about last Friday night's Bluejacket win over Paintsville. Thanks everybody - good job!

Josh Shepherd, director of Public Relations at Johnson-Mathers Health Care Inc., told me last Friday that the welcome social for Dr. Chuck Dahan will be postponed until sometime in October. It was originally scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 25 at Carlisle Christian Church. Josh said he'd inform Mercury readers of the new date. Dr. Dahan, soon to be a new physician in the Carlisle community, has some paperwork to be completed before he gets here.

Congratulations to Doris Ecton, interim administrator of Johnson-Mathers Health Care Inc. on her new position. I've heard super things about Doris. She's served the administration office of Nicholas County Hospital 18 years. She's a good role model for today's teenage girls.

Letters To The Editor

Tutor is glad to see Nicholas students succeeding for the future

Dear Editor:

It was interesting to see the reply to my recent letter, from my friend Michelle, who felt she had an education at Nicholas County that she would always remember with pride. I am very happy for her that she has those memories, but one must remember there are other 'classes' in life than just inside a school, and sometimes not everyone experiences the same thing. I remember Michelle as the daughter of a dear friend, a wonderful girl who was undoubtedly a cooperative and capable student and who I feel sure worked hard to earn her education.

At the period of time when I was involved one way or another with the school system, I honestly felt there were problems within the system that were never dealt with. Not only my child, but some others, were not given the same treatment that Michelle praises so highly, and while I am happy for her, the fact is I must stand by my statement that in many areas, during that period of time, yes, the system was sadly lacking. Primarily the Elementary School. Our experience during High School came about I feel as a result of the problems early on which were as I said, never dealt with in the lower grades.

Some of the things that happened, not only to my child but to others I personally know of, would not be tolerated in today's system, and for that I am glad.

It is commendable that among Michelle's friends she can count "doctors, lawyers, teachers, accountants, bankers, nurses, and business people of all types", but I challenge that if a ratio were taken including the whole, those would be a minority. Congratulations to those who can afford to further their education to that success, but again I repeat, not everyone can, and to label some as student who have "slipped through the cracks", I find offensive.

"... and to label some as students who have 'slipped through the cracks,' I find offensive."

My son's experience in the school system not withstanding, I would offer further justification for my feelings by the fact that as a Literacy Council Tutor, I saw a bright and capable young man come to me for tutoring, who had been passed through the Nicholas County School system up to the tenth grade, and who at that time had the reading and writing skills of no more than a second grader. In his own words, when I asked him how he could possibly have gone so far, "They passed me to get rid of me". This in the same time period during which Michelle was a student.

I apologize if my words make Michelle's friends uncomfortable, but I stand by them. I will always regret that I did not follow the route taken by some others, and chosen a different school system.

In closing I feel I must say that if you are NOT a doctor, lawyer, teacher, accountant, banker, nurse, or business person, please don't feel as though you "fell through the cracks", and be proud of what you are and what you do. Be happy for those who had opportunities in life you may not have had, financially or otherwise, but don't envy them. If you're a farmer, truck driver, aide, cemetery worker, clerk, tobacco worker, horse farm worker, factory worker or housewife, be proud of yourself if you've turned out a good honest human being.

It was not my intention to open another can of worms when I made my comments about the recent problems in the District, which by the way I am glad to read seem to be righting themselves. But I stand by my words, and maintain there are many others that with similar supportive families, and strong school and community leaders ship to see more students succeed, and that seems to be what's happening now in Carlisle. It's pointless to dwell on the past, but it's shameful to repeat it. Good luck with what seems to be a positive future with the school system today.

Sincerely,
Linda McGray
Carlisle, Kentucky

Writer advocates higher education

Dear Editor,

It was a "shocker" to read in the September 14th Lexington Herald coverage of Nicholas County tobacco that a school board member's only advice to the young for an alternative to a dwindling tobacco future was "...better get 'em a trade".

Hopefully, when voters go to the polls in November to elect school board members, they will be certain to vote for candidates who appreciate and understand the importance of education and keeping in step with the rest of the world. It's the attitude "What was good enough for y daddy..." that will keep Kentucky isolated and behind.

Anyone who advocates the status quo doesn't belong on a board of education; it's a conflict of interest.

Don't get me wrong. I am not putting down tradesmen and farmers (there have been a few in my family) - God knows we need them all - but let's encourage and help them "be all they can be", mentally and physically.

After all, we're in the 90's and the 12th grade isn't the "moon" any more. Our children need this antiquated "ceiling" lifted by progressive school officials.

Higher education not only gives our kids a better chance in the workplace, but broadens their minds for a fuller life in this multi-cultural society.

Sincerely,
Mrs. Rose Marie Farah
Carlisle, Kentucky

ASCS

Ronnie Clark; and Judge Smith. Mike Phillips of the Nicholas County Extension Office came in during the hour long meeting.

The quick petition deadline was necessary, Wiseman pointed out, because the U. S. House of Representatives is about to vote whether to continue U. S. Dept. of Agriculture closings.

Wiseman said the U. S. Senate vote was 98 to 1.

"The House hasn't voted. The House has been dragging its feet," Wiseman commented.

"Espy is holding a big stick," commented Nicholas County ASCS Office Director Jim Furnish referring to U. S. Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy. It is believed that the final decision on closings will be Espy's decision. Congress is only voting on whether to close the offices.

"I have no idea of when it will come up before the House. It may come up before the end of this week. Mr. (Hampton) Henton is scheduled to be in Washington next week. They may be trying to move on as quickly as possible," Wiseman said.

Henton visited Carlisle a couple of weeks ago stating a gag order was in effect as to which ASCS offices would be closed. At one time, when there wasn't a gag order, Nicholas County was on the list.

The office closings will be initiated to save money, Henton said.

"The better sale job you can give to Happy Henton, the better your chances are," commented Darrell.

Offices on the closure list are those that do not offer the "one-stop-shopping" concept of having Soil Conservation, Farmers Home Administration and the ASCS Office at one location.

Wiseman also asked the committees to get a letter writing campaign completed by Friday so Baesler can take letters from local people to Washington Saturday.

Baesler plans on speaking to U. S. Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy about the importance of the tobacco industry to Kentuckians and explain why Kentucky farmers need their local ASCS offices.

Wiseman said Baesler's main interests are the constituents in his districts, those in both Nicholas and Jessamine County. Jessamine County is reportedly in danger of losing its ASCS Office but that can't be confirmed due to the gag order, Wiseman emphasized.

"The letters will let him know this means something to us," Wiseman said adding that the needs of Kentucky are different than other states because Kentucky is such a largely agricultural state.

Carlisle Mayor Ronnie Clark suggested having Nicholas County High School agriculture education teacher Doug Bechanan and his Future Farmers of America students write letters, too.

"I agree with the mayor. The kids are our future. This is really for them," said committee member Carty Lester.

Wiseman said he talked with Baesler about keeping the ASCS office open. "We need to document exactly what Jim's office does now," Wiseman began. Also to be documented will be the estimated impact of the closings and the future mission of the USDA.

Wiseman said there were 114 ASCS offices in Kentucky and that 94 will be targeted to remain open. "We believe there needs to be 96 so we're pursuing this!"

Demonstrating the unique agriculture system in Kentucky in new way Wiseman said Baesler will attack the problem in Washington. "Our argument is that we are unique. We have more agriculture than the other states.

"Nicholas County is still high on the agriculture list. We need to show 94 is not the right number. Maybe 96 is," Wiseman stressed.

Furnish concurred. There are 900 tobacco bases alone in Nicholas County.

Also, the office handles ore than agricultural records. Farmers come there to get in contact with Soil Conservation representatives and get Farmers Home information. The office also supplies maps to farmers and gives agriculture information to forestry personnel, insurance representatives and appraisers and statistics reporters.

As Wiseman left the Fiscal Court room, he concluded, "It's still uphill."

Phillips hoped, "Maybe they'll take the path of least resistance.
