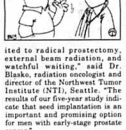
Planting "Seeds," Harvesting Health

New Treatment For Prostate Cancer Offers High Success Rate, Reduced Side Effects

(NAPS)—In 1987, Don Cox was just a statistic—one of the 97,000 American men diagnosed that year with prostate cancer. This year, he's a winner. Seven years after undergoing a revolutionary treatment called "seed implantation," Don is cancer-free, without the common side effects—incontinence and impotence—associated with conventional treatments such as radical prostate surgery (surgical removal of the prostate) and external radiation therapy.



"I chose seed implantation because it offered the fewest side effects," said Mr. Cox. "I received the implants in the morning, stayed in the hospital overnight, and was released by noon the next day. It was a no-sweat procedure." Now 69, the retired aeronautical engineer and his wife Ruth enjoy skiing, tennis, golf, dancing, boating, and spending time with their four children and five grandchildren.

In seed implantation, titanium pellets (about the size of a grain of rice), irradiated with Iodine-125 or Palladium-103, are non-surgically inserted directly into the prostate. This one-time, outpatient procedure represents an attractive middle-ground between "watchful waiting" (observation only, with no treatment) and more aggressive interventions, including surgery and radiation, both of which can compromise a patient's quality of life.

Prostate surgery (also known as radical prostectomy), requires a lengthy hospitalization and recovery period. It is also frequently followed by impotence and incontinence. External beam radiation, which involves daily treatments at a medical center for several months, is associated with a 15 to 30 percent rate of impotence, as well as a loss of bladder control and rectal burning.

"Until recently, choices for patients like Don—with early-stage prostate cancer—were limited to radical prostectomy, external beam radiation, and watchful waiting," said Dr. Blasko, radiation oncologist and director of the Northwest Tumor Institute (NTI), Seattle. "The results of our five-year study indicate that seed implantation is an important and promising option for men with early-stage prostate cancer."

According to Dr. Blasko's five-year results, 298 patients treated with Iodine-125 or Palladium-103 seeds at Northwest Hospital, in Seattle, showed a 92 percent cancer-free success rate, with minimal bladder or potency problems.

Another study, conducted by David Beyer, M.D., at Boswell Memorial Hospital in Phoenix, Arizona, confirmed these findings.

"We saw a survival rate higher than 91 percent in our study group of 357 seed implant patients at the five-year mark," said Dr. Beyer. "Our study showed that overall success rates with Iodine-125 seed implants are excellent and comparable to those of surgery and radiation therapy.

"Today, seed implantation is an important prostate cancer treatment option for patients like Don Cox—not only to control cancer, but also to ensure that men can continue to enjoy satisfying, comfortable, and active lives," concluded Dr. Beyer.

A Growing Interest In Saving Trees

(NAPS)—Enough trees to fill a forest twice the size of New England have been saved through the use of treated wood. That's because the preservative treatment extends the life of wood significantly.

One type of treated wood, called Wolmanized wood, resists termites and fungal decay so effectively that it lasts for at least as long as it takes replacement trees to be grown and cut.

Many experts feel that without treated wood, the demands of our railway, utility, construction and marine industries might have exhausted our forest resources years ago. According to the Southern Forest Products Association, if it weren't for treated wood an additional quarter billion merchantable trees would be needed every year in North America to replace decayed or termite-infested structures built of wood.

According to one recent report, the total volume of wood in U.S. forests is now 20 percent greater than it was in 1952, partly, no doubt, as a result of treated wood's ability to lengthen the service life of wood. Of special interest: while the preservative protects against rot and termites, Wolmanized wood is harmless to people, plants and pets when used as recommended.

The next time you see a deck or a porch made of treated wood, you'll know that trees are standing because the wood in that deck lasts longer.

East Union chapter meets

The East Union Homemakers met Thursday night at the extension office. There were 6 members present. The thought for the day was "It only takes a moment for a kind act, but the results can last a lifetime. Our meeting started by collecting dues for the coming year. We filled our calendars with a hostess for each month. A lot of reading was done by our members this summer. We discovered as we took our monthly report. Lorella Stephenson served as hostess and treated us with ice cream and cake before we dismissed. Elsie Ruth Burden will be hostess next month.
