"Daniel Boone"
Ryan Hunter

As I sit here on the river fishing at Blue Licks, I look at the arrowhead that I found. I gaze across our farm and imagine Daniel Boone camping on the river, watching for wild animals or Indians. Then I glance across the river and see the cave where he hid his son's body after he was killed by Indians. I realized I could be sitting in the exact same spot that Daniel Boone once did. If it hadn't been for his bravery in exploring this unknow land Kentucky would be very different for us today. As I sit there glaring at the river I feel my eyes start to close and I feel myself leaning against a tree behind me.

I am startled to hear gun shot. I look around and see a yound boy who seems cheerful about something. The boy runs towards me, but doesn't see me hiding behind a tree. He moves so quietly in the woods, that it was almost imaginary. Suddenly I see him pick up a small rabbit that he had apparently shot. I wait until the boy is a good distance then I had a sudden urge to follow him. He goes into a cabin in the woods. I peek into the window. He calls this woman mother as she takes the rabbit from the boy and gives him a hug. She says, "Happy Birthday Daniel!" I walk around the house and see the words "Daniel Boone" carved into one of the logs. I realize this must be the home of Daniel Boone!

I see a cake sitting on the table, and count 12 candles. I remember that Daniel Boone was born on November 2, 1734, from history class. I added 12 and realize that it is the year 1746. Next I had to determine where I was. I remembered that in Mrs. Griffith's history class we learned that Daniel Boone grew up in a small log cabin in Oley, a frontier settlement in Pennsylvania. I was trying to decide how I got to Pennsylvania, when I noticed that the scene had changed.

I was standing in front of a covered wagon. Instead of that small boy, I saw a young man. He was loading supplies on the wagon. That same woman I had seen earlier came out and said "Thanks Daniel," and sat up on the front of the wagon and it left. I hid on the bottom and we were on our route.

We traveled for what seemed like a year. Then one day Daniel's mother said "We're almost there Daniel." Suddenly I remembered that the Boone's settled in North Carolina in 1751.

I ran to hide behind a tree when abruptly I heard several gun shots. There was a whole army of troops firing against each other. At the front of one group was a man with a coonskin hat firing his gun. I realized that it was Daniel. I then recollected that Daniel Boone fought in the French and Indian war. The British were not experienced in Indian techniques of fighting, so they were attacked and assassinated.

Daniel and a man known as John Finley escaped into the woods. I followed them and hid behind an oak tree. I heard him tell Daniel about a strange and mysterious land. It was west of the Appalachian Mountains. He said the Indians called this land Kentucky and it had forests with all sorts of wild animals and buffalo. Those stories that night inspired Daniel to go to Kentucky. Finally, a swift 14 years later I watched as Daniel decided to lead an expedition across the Appalachians to Kentucky. Daniel must have appreciated this land because he went back to North Carolina to gather other settlers to go back with him. As they were exploring, several settlers were attacked by Indians and many of the people, including his son James were killed. The surviving settlers turned back. Later I watched as Daniel and some men went to a place called Blue Licks to get salt. They were captured by the Indians and taken to Chilicothe. Daniel eventually gained the trust of the Indians and was adopted by the chief, Black fish. As I turned to see a rabbit run into the woods, I realized it was later again. They were on the Licking river at Blue Licks fighting another battle. From my history books I knew this took place on August 19, 1782.

I followed Daniel became lieutenant of the militia, and representative of the Kentucky legislature. I was also sad as I saw him lose all claim to his land because he had not followed the proper preedure to gain legal title to it. Even though he was teh first white man to explore and settle in Kentucky, this meant nothing.

As I looked at the sky in diablelief, I felt someone touch my arm. I looked around and saw my grandfather. He said, "Are you going to fish or sleep?" Surprisingly the line took off and I reeled it in. I caught a rather small fish, but was rather happy because I had just lived through the famous Daniel Boone's entire life. If it hadn't been for this man's bravery and endurance, it may have longtime before anyone was heroic enoug to travel through this unknown land in the great state of Kentucky. He experienced many heartaches and joys in this place, Kentucky. In my eyes he is the most heroic person to come to this great land of America.
