Juvenile charged with murder was to be sentenced December 17

By Leigh Stone
Managing Editor

The juvenile charged with murder in the shooting death of his mother was scheduled to be officially sentenced in Nicholas County Circuit Court 8:30 a.m. Wednesday, Dec. 17.

Mark A. Young was scheduled to appear before The Honorable Judge Robert McGinnis for formal sentencing verified Nicholas County Circuit Clerk Sally Watkins Tuesday afternoon.

The Mercury's regular press schedule is at the time of the sentencing on Wednesday morning.

Commonwealth Attorney Jack Keith had earlier told The Mercury the sentencing would be the third Wednesday of December in the case of Mark Young in the death of his mother, Sharon, May 6 at their East Union Road home.

Young, housed at a juvenile detention center, was a 16-year-old student at Nicholas County High School.

He reached a plea bargain agreement with Keith two weeks ago. He was to have been tried as an adult Dec. 1.

Keith said the Kentucky statute regid the sentence for murder is 20 years to life with parole not being granted for at least 10 years and not more than 12 years.

Keith praised Young's family for cooperation.

An aunt of Young's told the paper recently she was having great difficulty having a good Christmas and that the ordeal has added to the family's health problems.

Sharon Young had been employed at Johnson Mathers Nursing Home and was walking to her car to get to work when she was shot.

The case has been under the investigation of the Kentucky State Police. A KSP spokesperson said the juvenile confessed to the crime later in the day after the shooting.

NCHS sophomore writes short story about a car

Submitted To The Mercury
By Mrs. Fred Hollar, Writer.
By: Jonathan J. Stiltner, a Sophomore at NCHS

"Lee! Lee!" I turned to see who was calling my name. It was my best friend, Tom. "I know you have been looking for an old car to set up for racing," he was telling me. "I saw an old Camaro out on Old Shanks Road yesterday. You might be able to pick it up for a couple of hundred dollars." "That sounds like a good deal to me, what do you say we go check it out after school today?" I replied. Tom said, "I don't have my car today, my sister is using it, we will have to take your truck, I'll meet you at the front after the last bell."

The rest of the day went by so slow, I didn't think the bell would ever ring. I couldn't believe it when it finally did. Tom was waiting on th esteps and we hurried and jumped in my gold truck and headed for Old Shanks Road. We rounded the corner and there it was I knew when I first saw it, it would be perfect. "Oh No!" I said, "There sits Max Cirtis' truck, what is he doing here?" I asked Tom. "Who knows," Tom said, "but if he's here you know there's going to be trouble." Max Cirtis is the worst bully in town. All he cares about is himself, and all the trouble he can cause.

We pulled into the driveway just as he was getting out of his truck. "Hey geeks," Max said, "I overheard you geeks talking at lunch today about trying to get this old car, well I think I'll just take it instead." Tom pulled me to the side and said, "Now what are we going to do? You know Max has a lot more money than we would ever hope to have. His Dad owns half this town already." I told Tom. " The only reason he wants it is because we do. If he get it it all he would do would be junk it." "I know," said Tom, but let's talk to the man anyway."

Max already jrocked on the door. An old man came on the porch and yelled to us, "Can I help you boys with something?" Max said to him, "They think they are going to buy that old piece of junk you have sitting there." and he laughed. "That's not junk!" the old man said, quite offended. "That just happens to be a 1969 Camaro, one of he best ever built. It has won more street races than you have been alive boy. I put that motor in there myself, I've rebuilt all of it and it runs real good." "Yeah well if you ask me any Chevrolet is a piece of junk, only fit for the junkyard!" Max said to him. "Well, I hope you didn't want to buy that car because you won't because I wouldn't sell it to you with your attitude," the old man said. " Now why don't you just get off my property." Max looked at him and said, "Do you know who my Dad is? He just happens to own half this town!" The old man looked at Max and smiled saying, "Well, he doesn't own this half, so you just be on your way. Go on now." Max was really mad but knew there wasn't anything he could do. He jumped in his truck spinning gravel everywhere.

In a nice voice, the old man looked at us and said, "My name is Mr. Waters, you boys interested in this old car? I'd really like to see her go to someone who will appreciate her." "Well I think you have the right person here, so let's talk about making a deal, what do you say?" I said. Mr. Waters put his hand on my shoulder and said, "Let's go on in here and see about fixing you up with this car."

Alternative school approved at guard armory once again

Both schools support board action

By Leigh Stone
Managing Editor

Alternative School for the Nicholas County Schools was approved for the National Guard Armory.

The effort will take place immediately.

Alternative School was previously held at the armory, but discontinued due to budget cuts spring 1996, explained Superintendent Randy Everly at Monday's regular school board meeting.

Alternative School was requested by both high school principal Greg Reid and elementary school vice principal Pam Randolph.

Reid said he felt the Alternative School a the Armory would curb suspensions. He had 38 this year and 34 last year. "If we'd had the alternative school there this year we maybe would have had 20 suspensions."

Randolph asked the board if in extreme cases if some fifth and sixth graders could be sent to the school. Currently, the agreed upon ages are in grades seven through 12.

Superintendent Everly cautioned that in some cases, 20 year-old seniors could be in the class with fifth graders so the idea wouldn't be sound.

"Do you have someone in mind?" asked Vice Chairman Mattox of Randolph.

The vice principal said there was a boy she thought would qualify, but didn't press the issue.

HEART HEALTH

Study: Radiation Aids Arteries After Angioplasty

(NAPS)—There's good news for many of the 600,000 heart patients who undergo angioplasty each year. A new study has found that using low doses of radiation immediately after the procedure can significantly reduce the risk that a patient's arteries will re-narrow.

Angioplasty is designed to widen narrowed blood vessels in the heart. The procedure uses a small balloon catheter. It is then inflated. Nearly half of such patients will require a repeat procedure because of re-narrowing of the arteries.

One way to get around this has been to use stents, metal scaffolds inserted in the artery. The trouble is angioplasty and stents cause scars which later narrow arteries again. Using radiation prevents this scarring.

A six-month study showed low dose beta radiation reduced the rate of re-narrowing to about 15 percent. That's about one-third of the expected rate for this group of patients, according to Dr. Ian Crocker of the Emory University School of Medicine in Atlanta.

The radiation led to no significant exposure to either the patient or personnel, Dr. Crocker added. He announced his findings at the 39th annual meeting of the American Society for Therapeutic Radiology and Oncology (ASTRO) in Orlando, Florida.

The procedure added only five to ten minutes to the normal angioplasty, which usually takes from one to two hours, the doctor said.

"Based on our findings, the use of radiation therapy after angioplasty may reduce health care costs by reducing the number of repeat procedures," Dr. Crocker said.

As a result, a multi-center clinical trial has been started on the radiology procedure, the doctor said. It will include 1,100 patients at 26 different centers in the U.S., Canada and Europe.

ASTRO is the largest radiation oncology society in the world, with some 4,000 members.
