SHARPSBURG WATER DISTRICT WATER SHORTAGE ALERT

Sharpsburg Water District is asking all of it's customers to practice voluntary conservation measures due to this unusually dry period.

We are asking that customers restrict nonessential use such as filling of swimming pools, washing cars, and watering lawns and gardens.

Without significant rain fall, the situation could become much more serious. Every effort made to cut back on usage will help.

The following is a list of conservation measures for residential users: locate and repair leaks in faucets and toilets, use washing machines and automatic dishwashers only with full loads, take shorter showers and shallower baths, turn off faucets while brushing teeth, turn off shower while soaping up, reduce the number of toilet flushes per day.

National speaker featured at Kentucky Deer & Turkey Hunter's Consumer Show

A slate of nationally known hunting industry speakers is set to share their expertise at the first annual Bluegrass Bucks & Beards, a consumer show for deer and turkey hunters. Scheduled in Lexington for August 6, 1999 in Lexington Center's Heritage Hall, it will feature 20 informative seminars as well as booths and displays by dozens of retailers, manufacturers, outfitters, taxidermists and sportsmen's organizations. It is designed to bring consumers and retailers together by providing timely product information and hunting tips for consumers.

The following speakers will present hunting tips, techniques and information over the three-day exposition:

Ray Eye is a member of the Pro Staff for Hunter's Specialties, a well-known producer of calls and other hunting accessories. He has over 35 years hunting experience - 25 years as a Pro Guide. He will present two seminar topics, Treestand Placement will give new and experienced deer hunters insight into the small details that can make the difference between seeing a deer and actually getting a good shot. The Final Approach will give turkey hunters tips about coaxing that gobbler over the last 20 to 40 yards and into comfortable range for a sure shot.

Tim Farmer is the popular host of the Kentucky Afield television show, the longest running weekly outdoor show in the nation. Tim lost the use of one arm in a motorcycle accident, yet continues to enjoy all outdoor activities at a level of skill many outdoorsmen can envy. He will make a presentation about bowhunting challenges and will share video clips of some of his successful bow hunts.

Wayne Gendron is the Pro Staff Team Captain for Quaker Boy Games Calls. He has over 30 years hunting and calling experience and has won many state turkey calling championships. He has also achieved a double Grand Slam by taking two adult gobblers of each of the four American turkey subspecies in one year. He will share his turkey hunting knowledge in a presentation sure to help hunters of all skill levels.

Charlie Logsden is a biologist for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. He is overseeing the Elk Restoration Program which is drawing national attention for its success and low mortality rates. He will give an up-to-the-minute update on the Elk Restoration Program.

Craig Schultz is the founder of Critter Getter Game Calls. This Kentuckian makes turkey box calls as well as waterfowl and other calls. He recently received the Gibson Award from the National Wild Turkey Federation for the best-sounding box call. He will present Friction Addiction, a presentation about the use of friction-type calls, and Tricks for Problem Gobblers, those wary old toms which require special tactics.

Jerry Simmons is a member of the Mossy Oak Camouflage Pro Staff. He took his first deer with a bow in 1957 and has taken more 400 big game animals, including turkeys, since. His presentation focuses on natural food sources and tips for setting up to take full advantage of them.

Jim Strelec is the national promotions coordinator for Knight & Hale Games Calls. He has over 40 years experience and is credited with helping to develop many of Knight & Hale products. He takes pride in his role as a teacher and will present four seminars about deer calling techniques. According to David Hale, co-founder of Knight & Hale, "Anyone who attends one of his seminars will be a better hunter because of it."

George wright is the chief turkey biologist for the Kentucky Department of Fish & Wildlife Resources. He is credited with much of the success of the turkey restoration program which has seen the state turkey flock grow one hundred-fold since the program began. He is now conducting a nationally recognized gobbler mortality study using radio-collared adult tome turkeys to determine how they live and die. This accomplished hunter and biologist will discuss turkey management and a few hunting tips as well.

David Yancy is a top deer biologist with the Kentucky Department of Fish & Wildlife Resources. Kentucky is garnering national attention for the quality of many of the bucks harvested. During the 1992-94 reporting period Kentucky was second in the U.S. and Canada in Boone and Crockett buck production per square mile of habitat. He will discuss management techniques for producing trophy bucks.

Nicholas County beef prducers fund research

Many Americans have been conditioned to believe that red meat is incompatible with a heart-healthy diet - but according to an exciting new study funded by Nicholas County beef producers through their $1-per-head beef checkoff program, this is one of America's biggest nutrition myths.

"Comparison of the Effects of Lean Red Meat vs. Lean White Meat on Serum Lipid Levels Among Free-living Persons With Hypercholesterolemia" compared the impact of lean red and white meat on blood cholesterol levels. Publishes in the June 28 edition of the Archives of Internal Medicine, it found that a diet including 6 ounces of lean red meat consumed five or more days a week may actually reduce the risk of coronary heart disease (CHD).

"This is the third study to confirm that lean red meat, as part of a heart-healthy diet, positively impacts blood cholesterol levels," says Beth Ratliff, Director of Promotion & Consumer Affairs of the Kentucky Beef Council. "All three studies provide direct evidence that lean red meat can be included on a regular basis as part of a diet that reduces the risk of heart disease."

The results showed that both mean proteins lowered the "bad" and raised the "good" cholesterol, according to researchers. Total and low-density lipoprotein (LDL) cholesterol - the bad cholesterol - decreased for the duration of the nine-month period. In both groups, high-density lipoprotein cholesterol levels (HDL) - the good cholesterol - increased. In essence, these favorable changes in blood cholesterol levels amounted to approximately a 10 percent CHD risk reduction.

The multi-site study was conducted by the Chicago Center for Clinical Research, The Johns Hopkins University Lipid Clinic and the University of Minnesota. The three-site study compared the long-term effects on cholesterol concentrations of incorporating lean red or lean white meat into a National Cholesterol Education Program (NCEP) Step I diet among men and women with elevated blood cholesterol levels.

Two hundred and two men and women with mild to moderate blood cholesterol levels participated in the study. Half of the group derived 80 percent of their meat intake from lean red meat sources (beef, veal or pork) for six to seven days a week for nine months; the other from lean white meat sources (fish, poultry) for the same period of time.

Clinical studies confirm that lean beef is interchangeable with lean chicken and fish with regard to its influence on blood cholesterol levels. This study duplicated the results in a free-living environment that allowed individuals the flexibility to consume lean red meat according to their own schedule and taste preferences.

One of the most surprising findings of this study was that participants who consumed lean red meat were more likely to follow their diet regimen than participants consuming only lean white meat. According to the researchers, the participants eating lean red meat showed better compliance than those participants consuming lean white meat. Since lean cuts of red meat are now readily available to consumers, eliminating lean red meat is unnecessarily restrictive and advising against consumption may actually negatively impact long-term dietary compliance, thus increasing cholesterol levels.

"This study is the largest and longest to provide evidence that the case against lean red meat has been misrepresented," add Ratliff. "This is good news for beef producers, because now people concerned about heart disease can eat beef again guilt-free - and that should mean an increase in consumption."
