PROPERTY FROM FRONT

Or they recently left a job but didn't get their last paycheck. Or they are the heir to someone who died before they could claim their property.

One of my favorite stories comes from London, Kentucky. A gentleman there had bought some stock for $500 in the 1970s, left it a safety deposit box, and died without telling his heirs. A few years ago, I was able to return the stock certificate to his daughters and granddaughters. But it was no longer worth $500 — it was now worth over $135,000. While that amount of money is rare - it is very common for someone to be surprised to find a few hundred or even a few thousand dollars in the unclaimed property program.

Sometimes the property is even more meaningful. This summer, we will be returning a Purple Heart to the family of a World War I veteran. As our hearts and thoughts go out to those brave men and women who are currently fighting the war against terrorism, it is especially rewarding to see this particular item returned to where it belongs - the family of an American hero.

Maybe you too will find money or property that is rightfully yours. By clicking a few buttons on your computer and typing in your name, you can find out if you are a rightful owner in the privacy of your own home. Simply access our continually updated database at www.kytreasury.com. At our web site, you can also do a nationwide search of unclaimed property databases, just in case Kentucky has not always been your home. And if computers scare you, you can always call us toll-free at (800) 465-4722, and we'll do the search for you.

I hope that Unclaimed Property Month will prove to be rewarding to you, your family and your friends.

"Our attitude and our effort was good," the coach said. "And our goal at the beginning of the season, was to be better at the end - and we definitely did that."

One to pick and one to miss

Slackers (Rated R, 86 minutes, Destination Films)

Three friends (Devon Sawa, Michael C. Maronna, and Jason Segel) hatch elaborate plots to score the answers to all of their tests without the benefit of going to class or opening a book. Their master plan is discovered by a socially inept, obbsessive-compulsive student (Jason Schwartzman) who blackmails the trio into winning him the affections of his latest obsession (James King).

This is a prime example of a "check-your-brain-at-the-door" feature.

That means you should not look for any "Oscar-worthy performances" or any "hidden meanings" and especially do not expect "witty, biting social commentary." But that does not mean it is not a good movie, you just have to apply a different set of criteria when you watch it and remember to have fun.

The only way to describe this movie is that it's like a comedy mine field.

On one level, it's your run of the mill 'American Pie'-type teenage movie, but on the other hand, randomly placed throughout the movie are 'Porky's'-style comedy bombs that explode when you least expect them and after the shock of what you are seeing wears off, you can't help but laugh almost uncontrollably.

The standout performance is that of Schwartzman who plays the antagonist, Ethan. The character has no social skills whatsoever and lacks that little part of his brain that tells him he has gone too far. Schwartzman tackles the role wholeheartedly without fear and delivers the standout comedy performance of the year. On the flip side, Lauren Prepon (of That 70s Show) is totally wasted as the roommate of the popular girl.

The 'comedy bombs' and Schwartzman's performance save this movie from being just another college movie and is a lot of fun to watch.

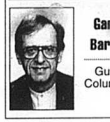
A trip to Laurel Gorge

Head of the Holler



Garry Barker
Guest Columnist

A little walk through the woods in Elliott County's Laurel Gorge on a sunny spring day included uphill climbs to two dual waterfalls, the kind of scenery you expect to find in National Geographic magazine.

By next spring, if all goes well, the trail through the Gorge will have a level hard surface and will totally handicapped accessible, including ramps up to a pair of overlooks.

A new interpretative center is being built to include information about the county, its history and people, and its culture, plus much information about the flora and fauna of the Gorge. Fish and wildlife will also be featured, and along the trail sheltered interpretative panels will guide you to a better understanding of what's all around you.

For me the day was like revisiting childhood, back when we played down under the cliffs of nearby Gimlet, and my gimpy leg even cooperated for most of the two miles or so. A few rest stops helped, and for a man who two years ago could barely walk from the car to the house the trip was especially rewarding.

The surgeon in Lexington who hooked me up with an artificial artery, a crossover pipe to get blood back into my right leg, would have been pleased to see how well his handiwork held up.

Anybody would be pleased to see what's happening in Laurel Gorge, where determined citizens are wielding shovels, picks, axes, and busy hands to level, drain, and prepare the trail bed. A hard surface will be put down on the level areas, and ramps will cross the lower levels to provide handicap access.

Final plans are being drawn for the interpretative center, which will include a classroom and be surrounded in time by a log cabin, a one room school, and maybe even a country store. Environmental education is the driving force that makes it all happen, that keeps the group working even after a 10 year struggle to keep the dream alive.

Elliott County's rockhouses and waterfalls are spectacular, and the splashing water is clear and clean. Seven or eight gorges bisect the county, depending upon your definition of a gorge; when we played there it was simply "down under the cliffs" on either side of Mauk Ridge, magical places where kids who climbed like mountain goats went for fun. Pretty soon, you'll all be able to see the kind of playground we enjoyed.

Access into Elliott County from I-64 is being 'improved' but to me the preferred route is still across Hwy 32 from Morehead to Sandy Hook, a twisting journey through pristine farmlands, forests, steep hillsides, and panoramic vistas.

Or you could circle around on Hwy 504, from Elliottville to Gimlet to Stark and Sandy Hook, and take a look at the land which was home to my ancestors and still is home to much of my mother's family.

Access to the Laurel Gorge trail will be down under the new bridge, or on June 29 you can just stay on the main highway and travel to Isonville for Minnie Adkins' "Folk Art Day in the Country," the annual gathering of the arts community there.

Call me for a guided tour.

We may have to make frequent rest stops, to accommodate my underpinnings, but while I'm recuperating you can enjoy being in Laurel Gorge.
