UNCLE SAM'S NAVY.

It Stands Sixth Among the Nations of the World.

In an Address by Rear Admiral Selfridge He Declared That It Should Stand Second—For Philippines.

A special dispatch to the New York Tribune from Boston says: Rear Admiral Selfridge, U. S. N., testified before the Naval Court of Inquiry and Commission recently gathered in Lincoln, South Framingham.

After describing the early history of the United States navy and its glory, and enumerating the principal naval engagements in which it participated in the civil war, he spoke of the two battles after the close of the rebellion in the navy lay idle, it being supposed by many parties that all of the trouble had been settled. Most of the vessels rotted and sunk, almost unnoticed, and those that were kept afloat were allowed to run down for want of repairs and proper care. The armament of our navy was no better than that of the merchant marine, was about such when it should be called upon to fight.

Admiral Selfridge then spoke of the necessity of such a navy as would be adequate to the protection of the country, and which would be a credit to the nation. He said: "I think that the navy should be increased to the extent that would enable us to meet the navy of any other power that could be brought against us. I think that we should have a navy second to none. I think that we should have a navy that would be able to meet the navy of any other power that could be brought against us
