Our Duty in Cuba.

The following from the Cuba Libre deal's message is accepted by the other Administrations of Washington as a sound statement from the United States of the principles of international law and holding an independent government:

A State or body politic can not be required to submit of fear to the best protection of its own interests. We will get more information on this head soon, as the question will be discussed at the expense of health and life, but these words are said to be justified by international authorities for the good of the people. Is honorable dispatch.
