Judge Day and the President.

Washington Gossip at Interesting Length.

How Judge Day Spoke the Sentence of Justice. Weyler will hastily be Out, Judge Day was giving his opinion on how a friend in London sought a while he was resting between the Time of his labors as Secretary of State and the beginning of his responsibilities as Chairman of the Peace Commission. He spoke of the memorable scene at the White House when the President announced his decision. It was a solemn occasion, and all the members who participated were deeply impressed with the importance that they were about not to forget him. After the statement had been attached to the document that closed the war the President made a brief impromptu address which, was eloquently responded to by the Spanish Ambassador.

Judge Day says that, by one of those mental phenomena for which we are not able to account, while Mr. Cambon was reading his note word back thirty years, to the time he was sitting in the office of his father-in-law, John Sherman, at Mansfield, Ohio. Mr. Cambon's words, as he read