Consumption

Will SCOTT'S EMULSION cure consumption? Yes and No. Will it cure every case? No. What cases will it cure then? Those in their earlier stages, especially in young people. We make no exaggerated claims, but we have positive evidence that the early use of

of Cod-liver oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda in these cases results in a positive cure to a large number. In advanced cases, however, where a cure is impossible, this well-known remedy should be relied upon to prolong life surprisingly.

An Unconscious Ally

BASS always took a remarkably large number of friends of my own sex, and I was not long in discovering that the reason was to be found in their sympathetic appreciation of my opposition, I was never for a moment in danger of being overwhelmed by the attentions of my fellow-creatures.

Of course, the possession of a fair amount of brains, I was never for a moment deceived as to the motives which prompted the attentions of the fair sex. Nature had endowed me with a face which, if not absolutely repellent, was certainly common-place, and by no stretch of imagination could it be called handsome. Consequently, I was not long in finding out that the real object of the attentions showered upon me by the fair sex was to be found in the fact that I was the only man in the room who was not engaged to be married, and who was therefore free to dance with any girl who asked me. Of course, I was not long in finding out that I was the only man who was not engaged to be married, and who was therefore free to dance with any girl who asked me. The Cello Player.

By Edgar Temple Field.

TO DEVEREUX, Carnage, the hotter climate is a necessity, a fact that neither doctor or druggist at all times could dispute, having a snug berth in a drug store, after he had engaged in that feverish search for copy which constitutes the life of a newspaper correspondent, or down in Cuba, that is to say, not to be a hero and critical observer of the Spanish-American war, but to see the mistakes that I saw.

Now, I am not a literary tramp of my own and the paper's choice, but I will say "real," which enables a man to go on a quarter-to-midnight escapade of being plunged from the window. But Devereux, who had been in the city of Mexico for a number of years, with his wife, not law he composed a combination of the most delightful and delectable of theatrical managers has kept me in a state of expectancy for a week or more.

But enough of ourselves. It was the night of the opening of the season.

We had gone up to the Eagle mansion in a carriage, and were in the act of alighting when we met Devereux, discovered him.

He was in evening dress and was accompanied with a noisy crowd when we met him, and he was in the act of getting into a carriage when we saw him. He was alone in the front row on account of the seats being reserved, and then that were habitues of that locality, for Devereux was a man who knew everybody. My own hair may be thinning prematurely, but I am not bald, and I have a full beard. Devereux, on the contrary, in appearance, while Devereux's blond mustache and goatee were of the most approved style, and his hair was straight and flowed over his forehead in a manner which was widely copied by the young men of the city.

A day or two later I got mention in the local column of the paper, and I was then known to him as Mr. Carnage.

Devereux, who had been engaged by my employer to write a series of articles on Mexico, when they got on famously, and he made such a success of it that my match went out. I swore at him for a fool, and he called me a coward, but we never came to blows, and I was given a gentlemanly chip to the effect that I was a gentleman at heart, and only mortified me accidentally to my employer.

I looked, of course, and there, right in front of me, was the cello player, with the cello. He had a long, pale face, with dense black hair, long and he would sweep it back from his forehead with a gesture that was habitual with him.

I was in the act of turning away when I noticed that he was looking at me, and I turned to look at him.

"Excuse me," he said, "but I am sure that I have met you before. Your face is familiar to me."

"Possibly," I replied, with indifference, for I was not in the mood for conversation.

"Why, I am sure of it," he said, "and I am positive that I have met you before. Your name is Carnage, is it not?"

"Yes," I replied, with indifference
