Hints Helping Housekeepers.

To remove paint splashed on window panes moisten the spots with a strong solution of soda, then rub hard.

To remove rust and mildew make a paste of cream of tartar and lemonade; rub on and dry in the sun; brush off.

In frying connecting pots a second or third time, be sure to put new rashers in the pan, as the fat will have lost its smell. Cornish with pasties.

Potato Croquettes.

Boil mashed potatoes dry; to a dessertspoonful of butter, a pinch of white pepper, a dash of cayenne, one egg and 1 teaspoonful each of salt and parsley; mix well and shape into croquettes; dip in egg and bread crumbs, and fry in boiling lard. Mount and garnish with fried parsley. Fry only a few pieces at a time, as they will not be crisp if too many are put in the pan at once.

GRANDMA WILL NOT CONSENT

and I am afraid I shall be disinherited if I feel well; I have a cough in my lungs are sore; am losing flesh. What shall I do?

Your doctor says take care of yourself and take plain cod-liver oil, but you can't take it. Only the strong, healthy person can take it, and they can't take it long. It is so rich it upsets the stomach. But you can take

SCOTT'S EMULSION

It is very palatable and easily digested. If you will take plenty of fresh air, and exercise, and SCOTT'S EMULSION steadily, there is very little doubt about your recovery.

There are hypophosphites in it; they give strength and tone up the nervous system while the cod-liver oil feeds and nourishes.

Don't be persuaded to take a substitute. Insist on SCOTT'S EMULSION. 50c. and $1.00; all druggists.

Up at Dawn, the other day, I found the whole of the household astir. Mother was busy in the kitchen, and the smell of the delicious coffee she was making filled the house. Father was in the dining-room, and I could hear him whistling as he laid the table. Even my little sister was helping, and I found her trying to remember which knife and fork belonged to each person. Then I remembered about the reason for all this unusual activity. It was my birthday, and I was fifteen. Father looked in because company clerk of the week, and I was presented with numerous presents from the others. After breakfast I went to the office with father, and when I returned I found that mother was exploring her nursery and wondering what to do with the things. "Lemon Dunce" she declared was not fit for me to see, and as it was a fine holiday, as it was a fine holiday break, I proposed to go to the country and play with my toys.

Two days I went, riding alongside the engine driver, and I had a most delightful time. He told me what there was to see, and I kept a sharp look-out, so that I should not miss anything. In the afternoon we had our dinner in the dining-car, and I felt very grown up indeed. I had never been in a dining-car before, and I enjoyed it very much. I had a good appetite, and I did full justice to the excellent meal provided. I noticed that the waiters were very attentive to the passengers, and I thought that they must be very well paid. I asked the driver about this, and he told me that they were not paid much, but that they received a great deal in tips. I thought that I would like to be a waiter when I grew up, so that I could always have plenty of money. I told the driver that I had made up my mind to be a waiter, and he laughed heartily. He said that he thought I should be a good waiter, as I was so fond of eating. I did not like to tell him that I had had enough to eat for the present, as I thought that he might think me greedy. I had had enough to eat for the present, as I thought that he might think me greedy. I had had enough to eat for the present, as I thought that he might think me greedy.

"Ah, said I. To those it will!"

"Yes," said he. "To those it will!"

I wondered what he meant, but I did not like to ask him.

With that I found him to be most kind and considerate, and I enjoyed my visit very much indeed. I shall never forget the Washington Express, which is of course the name of the engine which I had the honour to drive as Driving Island. It is like a beautiful picture in Santa Claus' Land. It was that road that the Washington Express used to run on, and I was very sorry when I had to leave it. I had a most delightful time, and I shall never forget it. I hope that I shall be able to visit it again some day. I am sure that I should enjoy it very much indeed.

GETTING UP SPEED QUICKLY.

An Impression Grade Device Used to Be Employed on the Central London Railway.

A novel experiment is being tried on the steepest running line of traffic on the Central London railway, the underground electric railway which opened recently, says the New York Sun. The object of the experiment is to see whether it is practicable to get up speed by a short distance, the grade for only 53 yards being the object of the plan is to stop a train more quickly than is possible on the level, and to get it up to speed more quickly.

If the efforts have observed that trains on the elevated road in this city can be stopped in a shorter distance on the down grades than on the level, and when they start after a stop they get up speed much quicker on the down grades than on the level. The time saved in stopping and starting would make a difference in the time of the trip, and the experiment is being tried on the line now in use. The Holland Vans, and Mr. Greathead, the engineer of the road, were English and have paid [illegible] there were not as many trains, and the experiment was looked upon as a failure. Mr. Greathead, however, as I stated, is trying it on a larger scale, and if it is successful it will be adopted on the Central London road. The experiment is being tried on the down grade between Bank station and Shepherd's Bush, which is a distance of about two miles. The grade is 1 in 53, and the train is started from the bottom of the grade. The train is then run up the grade, and when it reaches the top it is stopped by the application of the brakes. It goes down to the very point of starting, and then is run up the grade again. The experiment is being made with a train of two cars, and the motor is of the latest pattern. The cars are equipped with the Sprague multiple unit system, which enables a train to be started, stopped and controlled from any car.

SHARE THEIR VACATION.

London Lawyers Open the Inner Temple Gardens to Poor Children.

When the weather gets hot in London the lawyers who have their offices in the Temple and Lincoln's Inn get up what they term the "long vacation" and go to the seashore or to the New York Post. Close by the Temple, in the Strand, and Fleet streets, are the neighboring poor the children of whom have to live in the [illegible] "long vacation." And now the lawyers have come to the conclusion that they will share their vacation with the children, so the bars and the gates of the Temple are to be thrown open, and give the inner Temple gardens over to the children of the poor. The arrangement has been made by the treasurer of the Benchers (that's what they call the governing body of the Temple), and he has enjoined from the children of the poor to be kept in order. Mr. Walter Blyth, vicar of St. Clement Danes, who will have charge of the children, says that he sees no reason why they should not be allowed to play on the grass. He says that he has been assured that the children will be kept in order by the police, and that they will be allowed to play on the grass. GYPSY CAUSED ALARM.

What Was Believed to Be Burglary in a Hamilton Turkish Bath to Be Simply Gypsy Lore.

Shortly after midnight Thursday night Officer Ege from a Michigan avenue [illegible] heard a noise in the Turkish bath establishment of Mrs. Ida Lee, which had been missing for three days. Ege thought that burglars had broken in, and several others responded to his call. Entrance was gained through a window, and the place was searched, but nothing was found. The officers were about to leave when they heard a noise in the [illegible] and found a gypsy woman. She was taken to the station and locked up. She refused to give her name, but said that she was a gypsy and had come to the city to visit her people. She was released on her promise to appear in court this morning.—Chicago Tribune.
