Jefferson Statue.

The sculptor of Thomas Jefferson, presented the city of Louisville by Morton, Belknap & Co., Jefferson street, between Fourth and Fifth, Louisville, Ky. Former Gov. W. O. Bradley was the orator of the occasion. The statue is of bronze and is a work of art which will stand for ages to perpetuate the illustrious Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence. It stands on a rich and heavy block of granite and is located on Jefferson street directly in front of the Court House. It is the best of the statue proper, and before the Columbian Exposition of Chicago, it is a fitting tribute to the founder of Democracy. The figure looks toward the statue of Henry Clay, Kentucky's great statesman, which stands on the opposite side of the street, in front of the Court House.

The sculptor is Sir Moses Ezekiel who is a German by birth, and has for more than a quarter of a century been domiciled in Rome. He was present at the unveiling. In conference with a reporter of the Louisville Courier-Journal he said:

"Though dead, he lives. He lives through example; he lives through his influence, he lives in the Declaration of Independence, he lives in the freedom of Jefferson, he lives in the identity of commerce, the all-embracing freedom that now blesses the people of this country, and he lives in the hearts of his countrymen. He is the embodiment of the free immortal tenets that were set here to-day.

"Last winter an infant child of Jefferson's descendants—a beloved baby—died. Elder Fun W. Rogers, a Christian minister, preached the funeral sermon. He chose as the theme of Chatterbox's story, and in that story he told the story of Jefferson's part and the child received rest. This is a beautiful story, and the author has written an essay on the first anniversary of Jefferson's birth, which will increase the effect of the story. Let us have no more of other doubtful controversies, but let us have the story told and retold. For only by it will Jefferson live."

Jules Verne Is Blind.

Jules Verne has become blind and is dictating his stories to his daughter. Some of the incidents in the forthcoming volume will be the form of a blind man who has become a detective. It is said that he is unable to write a word himself, and that he has to dictate to his daughter. He has made a number of trips to the United States, and the scenery, says the Courier-Journal, will be familiar to many readers.

When you feel that life is hardly worth the candle take it out of bed and put it on the mantel. Then you will feel like getting up yourself. Take a dose of Kentucky Liver. After using two bottles you will feel like a new person. Sold by E. P. Baird, druggist.

The Oldest Newspaper.

The oldest newspaper in the world is the Leiden Courant, and the "Annual Register" for the last 1,000 years was the oldest publication in the world. The oldest work recently published, however, is "Domesday Book," which, it is said, has shown that it is a lower lodger by 1,000 years than the Leiden Courant. The Domesday Book was published in the year 1086, and the Leiden Courant in the year 1086. The Leiden Courant is the oldest newspaper in the world, and the Domesday Book is the oldest work published, however. In the year 1086, the Leiden Courant was the oldest newspaper in the world, and the Domesday Book was
