Kentucky on Trial.

The affidavit of Jett and White declares that the actions of the militia "now created in the public mind the impression that this case existed there in an extraordinary way. Their aim is an extreme one as it brings to direct issue the question of Kentucky's ability to govern herself." If the militia and their aides created trouble for peace that were ordered to go unarmed, it is difficult to see how the charge can be sustained. Nor does it have any bearing upon the question to say that the militia were not legally called out. The question is whether there can be no compromise. If the militia are guilty, such is the least punishment which can be inflicted. The trial will be watched not only by the people of the State, but by the people of the United States. Kentucky has announced her intention of restoring order and good government at any cost. The cost must be more than offset by the benefits. Kentucky cannot afford to be disgraced. If it does not do so, it will be done for it.—Louisville Times.

Carried Out His Plans.

Last Request of a Dying Millionaire Obeyed by His Mourning Children.

A millionaire had died. There had been a great sympathetic grief among those who had been most appreciatively remembered in the last assembly for account got among those who had expected to, and hadn't got a dollar, relates the Baltimore American.

The will was a document. The millionaire's sons had prepared for reading once. Among the pet plans of the old man's declining years was a magnificent palace, on whose style of construction he had consulted with every member of the family.

"I am very thankful that it is a will," said the eldest son, as he broke the seal, "for I have always had a fancy for building."

"I may say truthfully that it is a relief to me," said the second son, "for I have been designing in that fortune."

Sighing the young man as he returned with the empty envelope.

A Much-Traveled King.

Edward VII. Has Visited Many Foreign Lands on Peace and Water.

Alexander and Caesar, Hannibal and Napoleon, Wellington and Washington are all names associated with Edward VII. Before he was of age as Prince of Wales, before he was king most of the European courts, he had passed from Sandringham to Windsor, and in 1860—in his four through Canada and the United States—he had met the President, Abraham Lincoln, and all the great grandfather, George III., says the London Chronicle.

Later, under the guidance of Dean Stanley, he made a journey to Rome, ascended the great pyramid. He has been present at the first opening of the Suez Canal, was transferred the Sphinx, cantella with a salute of Turkey and, accompanied the remains of a ruler from the Crimea to the Kremlin at Moscow. He has been present at many of his modern southern possessions in India, Ceylon and Burmah, and at Constantinople, from Egypt to Scandinavia, the spacious yet fully navigating planet is seen by Edward VII. and is open book.

Their Juice Island.

Montserrat, in the British West Indies, Our Vast Garden of Lime Trees.

Nearly all the lime juice used in the United States comes from the island of Montserrat, in the British West Indies. The lime grows in many of the West Indian islands, but only in Montserrat is it used commercially, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. That island has a million trees, and the annual crop of limes is 30,000,000 to 40,000,000.
