SYNOPSIS.

Frederick Hardy, a fashionable Boston boy, is disinherited by his wealthy uncle because of his love for Ethel Trading Company's daughter in Russia. On his journey through Europe he meets Ethel and her father and they travel together to Moscow. Because of suspicious circumstances Hardy is arrested as a Japanese spy and imprisoned. Ethel is also arrested and found upon his person a letter from Hardy's uncle to the Czar of Russia. Ethel is released, but Hardy is kept in prison. Ethel's father is killed by a bomb thrown by a Russian revolutionist. Hardy is released from prison and is employed by Ivan Petroff, a Russian nobleman, to act as his secretary. He was treated by Petroff's daughter Olga. Hardy is sent to Port Arthur, Manchuria, securing Princess Romanoff as a companion for Olga. Hardy is arrested as a spy at Port Arthur. The situation looks serious for him. Ethel, who is also in Port Arthur, is released from prison. The princess thanked Hardy for his kindness to her daughter. Hardy is released from prison. The morning arrives. Hardy is taken to the execution ground. Hardy is tied to a post and the soldiers prepare to shoot him. Hardy is released from prison
