Representative Lee O'Neil Browne of Ottawa, Ill., Democratic leader of the lower house of the legislature, was indicted by the special grand jury at Chicago on a charge of bribing Charles A. White, Democratic member from O'Fallon, Ill., to vote for William Lorimer for United States senator. The specific charge mentioned in each of the 11 counts of the indictment is that Browne paid White $850 at the Briggs house, in Chicago, on June 16, 1909, as part of a total bribe of $1,000. At the same time the grand jury returned indictments charging perjury against Representative Robert R. Wilson of Chicago and Michael B. Link of Rock Island. They are accused of having perjured themselves in investigations before the grand jury that they had not participated in the alleged "pack pool" distribution at St. Louis, which was one of the features of the "legislative vacation" on which the Browne indictment is based.

The horror of the great earthquake at Carriago, Costa Rica, is told in vivid image and bounds. The loss of life, at first reported at 500, is now placed, according to the latest news from the scene of disaster, at not less than 1,000, and it may largely exceed that figure. Hundreds were seriously injured in the collapse of buildings. The property loss will amount to many millions of dollars.

William Randolph Hearst entered suit in the federal court against Henry Watterson individually for $100,000, and the Courier-Journal for the same sum. The suit against Mr. Watterson is based on the editorial which, according to the petition, applauded the remarks made on Mr. Hearst by Mayor Gaynor at the Press banquet in New York and "accepting as proven Gaynor's charges."

Striking employes of the Columbus Light & Railway and Light company voted to accept the proposition for peace proposed by Mayor Marshall, under which the striking employes' places are to be given the option of returning to work at the wages paid prior to their former pay or accepting employment under other companies.

President Taft gave a vigorous denial to the statement of Mr. Hearst for the letters of criticism of the appointment of Judge Archbald, which Hearst said he had shandon of Clarence Darrow, Chicago attorney, and charging manners at once gave the impression that the president was the boss and the right thing at the right time. He is a "dispenser of public journals" to make unfair charges against men in public life. "All I am apposing to the charges against Archbald," he said, "is not especially for myself, for, indeed, I am in a measure responsible for the letter than some of the rest of the public, but I am appealing for justice in dealing with all classes." Mr. Taft was speaking at a luncheon given in the Business Men's league of St. Louis.

To the disappointment of the several hundred guests who used physical force, robbery and friendship to pry from Mrs. Russell Sage's lips some hint as to a division by E. H. Clarke and E. H. Harriman, arbitrators in the controversy between the railroad and the employes.

THE LATE KING EDWARD VII.

CAREER OF EDWARD VII., KING OF GREAT BRITAIN

England's dead king Edward VII., whose full title was "king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of all the British dominions beyond the seas, emperor of India," was born August 9th and the second child of Queen Victoria and Albert, prince consort. He was born November 9 1841, in Buckingham palace and was christened Albert Edward.

During the long years of his private life Edward's public duties consisted solely in the discharge of ceremonial duties such as all manner of public events, and the representation of royalty at the funerals of the duke of Cornwall and his emeldest son, the duke of Clarence. His heir apparent was a most industrious worker and both in the discharge of four private estates, and especially his education was the care of his father, the prince consort, and his mother, Queen Victoria. Edward was educated among the aristocracy of his country, and was sent to Oxford and Cambridge, during these years he acquired a wide general knowledge, and later on coming in contact with the world at large, he gained that knowledge of men which was especially useful to him in his future life. He was confirmed on his 18th birthday, and soon afterwards he was gazetted a lieutenant in the Grenadier guards. He was also commissioned colonel of the Tenth royal hussars, and was appointed colonel of the Royal Dublin fusiliers. His first foreign visit was to Canada, where he was received everywhere with hearty welcome. He was present at the great exhibition of 1851, and in the following year he was made a knight companion of the most noble order of the garter. In 1853 he was appointed colonel of the Royal Scots fusiliers, and in the following year he was made a knight companion of the most ancient and most noble order of the thistle. In 1855 he was appointed colonel of the Tenth royal hussars, and was made a general in the army. In 1856 he was appointed colonel of the Grenadier guards, and was made a knight grand cross of the most honorable order of the bath. In 1858 he was appointed colonel of the Scots fusilier guards, and was made a knight grand cross of the most exalted order of the star of India. In 1860 the prince made a tour of the United States and Canada, and on the next year he joined the British army in the Mediterranean. In 1862 he set out on his travels in the east, visiting Egypt and Greece, and on his return he joined the British army in Ireland. In 1863 he was married to Princess Alexandra of Denmark, and Prince Alexander John, who died the day after his birth in 1871.

Absolute Rest.

Clyde Fitch was an indefatigable worker and an actor who has played in many of the Fitch comedies. Whenever he had a play on the stocks he would labor over it day and night, and the strain would finally tell on him, and getting very little sleep. Consequently his health suffered. He would work until on the verge of a breakdown, and then his physician would step in and force him to knock off.

"During one of these periods of enforced idleness he was lounging in the Players club one day when Henry H. Rieble, the prolific comic opera librettist, entered.

"'What are you doing now?' asked Rieble.

"'I'm in my doctor's hands,' replied Fitch. He tells me I'm in a bad way, and has absolutely forbidden me to do any brain work.'

"'That's tough,' said Smith. 'How do you manage to put in the time?'

"'Oh, I'm writing the libretto of a musical comedy,' replied Fitch with one of his cynical smiles."

Comparative Anatomy.

"You may be better than others, but that doesn't mean to say you are worth much.

They All Serve.

George C. Boldt, the well-known hotel man, who came to Philadelphia about the holidays of Switzerland.

"They are good," said Mr. Boldt. "At the office they are courteous and quick. The Swiss are a nation of hotel keepers.

"The Alps, you know, draw all the world to Switzerland, and the Swiss who wants to become a millionaire goes into the hotel business as an American would go into steel or sugar. He begins at the bottom; he is a waiter.

"It is said that once in Berne, at a hinner given by the Swiss Hotelkeeping men of Switzerland were gathered together. A rule had been taken, and in the intense silence preceding the speech-making verdict of the diners was absolute. 'Waiter!'

"Instantly the whole assembly rose as one man and answered, 'Sir.'"

RESULTS HARD TO FORECAST

Politicians in Two States Look Into the Future With Much Misgiving.

AWAIT RETURN OF ROOSEVELT

Situation in New York and Ohio Apparently Will Be Tangled Until His Position Is Known.

Special to the Mercury.

Washington.—Reinforced pressure is being brought to bear daily on Representative Nicholas Longworth, to secure his consent to be a candidate before the Republican state convention for governor of Ohio. He is in Chicago. Mr. Longworth, as the world knows, or ought to know, is the son-in-law of former President Theodore Roosevelt. The representative has told President Taft several times that he is, and will continue to be as long as he and Mrs. Longworth live, a continued, a strong and sincere supporter of the administration's policies.

There are some politicians in Washington who look on the candidacy of the fealty of Mr. Longworth to the administration as a guarantee against the part that the Ohioan believes that his father-in-law, Mr. Roosevelt, has shown unfairly declare fealty. Other politicians say that there is ground for no title, and that "think" acts for himself in political matters without regard to the advice or the suggestion of his wife's distinguished father.

If the "non-in-law representative" should become a candidate for the Republicans for the governorship nomination in Ohio, and there is no doubt but say emphatically that he will draw the Roosevelt Republicans into the fold sooner, and also the other Republicans, than any other candidate. Longworth is popular with all Buckeye Republicans, and the fact that Theodore Roosevelt is the father-in-law of Nicholas Longworth is frequently given as a reason why Colonel Roosevelt will have a great influence in Ohio politics when he comes home. Frequently this statement is made in Ohio as it has been elsewhere. The Democrats assert the truth of any statement to the effect that a move is fashionably by marriage between Mr. Roosevelt will have any sentimental or other effect in deciding the election in Ohio next fall.

In New York the governorship situation is extremely interesting. Colonel Roosevelt when he returns, is expected to take a hand in politics, and if he does even though he takes no hand in national affairs, and says nothing at all or com upon the Taft administration's achievements.

It seems possible that if the Roosevelt influence prevails, and if the record which William Loeb, jr., collector of the port of New York, has made for a score of cases stands, has made so far as those who once on a time was Mr. Roosevelt's friends are concerned, that he who once on a time was Mr. Roosevelt's friend may be the Republican candidate for governor. It is said that Mr. Roosevelt will name State William J. Gaynor, mayor of New York, for the governorship of the state provided Judge Gaynor says that he is willing to make the race. If the mayor runs for governor, and is elected and Mr. Harmon runs for governor in Ohio and is elected, it is generally conceded that Roosevelt will have as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the presidency

Seen Roosevelt Opposing Taft.

Henry Jennings Allen has said that according to press reports, that he believes that Roosevelt's speeches and lectures in America he will be found to be opposing Taft and the administration that instead of standing in defense of Taft, the colonel "flashes of lightning" will take the position of an advocate of peace.

There are in Washington friends of Mr. Roosevelt who are friends of Mr. Roosevelt, who say that Mr. Roosevelt is utterly mistaken and that when the colonel returns he will find that Taft will be a still loyal to the man who succeeded him in the White House. Director Hoot, as one has had occasion to write before, was requested upon his return to Washington to give him advice from a strict conservative point of view. The colonel has implicit confidence in his secretary of state, the man who now is a

DESTRUCTION OF BIRD LIFE

What is known as the great Forest boy meeting, in 1876 or 1877, covered an area of 20 miles long, and from three to four wide. Brewster says that the entire 60 miles in every tree of any size had more or less nests, and many trees were filled with them." If we picture to ourselves a flock of pigeons covering about 1,000 square miles of woodland with their nests, we may form some conception of the disappearance of the flocks that under date of 1813 Wilson found in their roosting places and darkened the sun like a thick cloud for hours as they passed in their migrations. In the same way the story of their butchery by the netters, the pigeon's general shooting of the country and the destruction of the birds that roosted on the ground, has been told. Thirty years ago passenger pigeons could be bought in the markets for a few cents. Now, 1400 awaits the fortune discoverer of a nesting pair. The unashamed blindness of American people to the gradual extermination of life and its relations

Fool Remarks.

"The insanity of many remarks that some people feel called upon to interject into conversation calls for a permanent commitment in lunacy," said the man with the ingrowing growl. When Company Comes.

If there is anything that all others that makes a woman feel desperate it is to have company coming in advance to spend the day, and to know that her husband is perched from the last washing and the napkins worn in the last washing, and that she had used Easy Task laundry soap for nearly a year, and that even spotlessly white she would be proud of it. Easy is the stormy of dirt and the friend of fabrics and fingers. Try it over Monday and you'll remain a wash day to Easy Task day.

SYNOPSIS.

A young Indian scout arrives on a lonely Indian agency in Montana and finds the agent murdered. The Indians are excited and not able to speak in any known language. She decides to disguise herself. Soon Bede runs in an attitude of prayer, bathing an inclosed spring.

CHAPTER II—Continued.

The next thing she remembered, she was unclosing her eyes as she had done earlier in the morning as the man was still watching by her side. She had been so utterly wearied by her strange adventure, by her long wrestling with thirst and starvation by the open boat that before she knew it, weariness overcame her. He had watched by her side without molesting her. It was late in the afternoon when she awoke. She was very tired; the silence was oppressive; the rapt attention of the creatures of the sea and sea bird had begun to pall upon her. She looked back at her, and repeated the process over and over as a dog might have done who was doubtful whether it had received some appointed place. Understanding she rose and followed him as he led her along the sands now shadowed by the tall palms until they came to a little hut, where she stopped and drank once more. They passed by the prostrate bodily through its shallows, she leaping from rock to rock until she reached the other bank. He went swiftly around the face of the cliff and she passed the point—she saw that it curved suddenly inward—and he led the shores into a sort of amphitheater and fair in the center of the bay the ocean opened. He halted there and entered fearlessly, she following. The man stood there for a moment, at least it seemed so in the fading light. In the center of the bay he was shone through the opening. It would be flooded with daylight at noon when the sun was staking behind the hill. It was cool, quiet, and the air was clean and apparently empty. The man stood silent for a moment, then burst forth into a hymn of praise. He was singing some song of thanksgiving for his safety, and apparently for the return of his companion. The girl was overcome by the solemnity of the scene. She knelt down on the edge of the pool and bowed her head in prayer. She was conscious that the man was looking at her, but she was not afraid. She felt that she was in the presence of a friend
