CHAPTER I

There was a rather peculiar incident in the history of the late Mrs. Green's life. It was a small, unimportant event, but it was one that had a great deal to do with the fate of her family.

It was on a bright, sunny day in the month of June, 1912, that the Green family was sitting in the parlor, enjoying a quiet afternoon together. The mother was reading a book, the father was looking at the newspaper, and the children were playing with their toys.

At that moment, a knock came at the door. A servant entered and said that a lady from the next door had come to see Mrs. Green.

"Who?" asked Mrs. Green, looking up from her book.

"A lady named Mrs. Smith," said the servant.

Mrs. Green looked at the door for a moment, then she said to her husband, "I'll go and see who it is."

When she returned, she was very much surprised to find that the lady was not Mrs. Smith, but a woman who she had never seen before.

"Who are you?" asked Mrs. Green, looking at the woman.

"I am Mrs. Green," said the woman, "and I am here to see you."

Mrs. Green looked at her for a moment, then she said, "You are Mrs. Green? But you are not my wife's mother."

"No," said the woman, "I am your mother-in-law. I have just come from the States and I am here to see you."

Mrs. Green looked at her for a moment, then she said, "You are my mother-in-law? But you are not my mother-in-law."
