The Ring and The Man

By
CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

A STORY OF POWER

The Power of Wealth, of Politics and of Love.

A man of wealth and of moral courage who defies the political ring in his campaign for Mayor of New York.

Of course there is a love story but it is of the inspiring and enobling type.

No story of recent years is a more timely commentary on the awakening civic conscience in our great cities.

You owe it to your own good citizenship to study this facinating character. There's plenty of action and interest.

Start with the opening chapter.

WATCH FOR IT. It is vital to the rest of the story.

If your name is not on our list let us enter it.

This story alone will be well worth the cost.

NEEDLEWORK

EYELET and Solid Embroidery—When there is a combination of these two embroideries it is always well to do the eyelet first. This is, of course, not compulsory, but it is rather harder to make a smooth, flat eyelet if close to it there are already worked some heavily-padded leaves which interfere more or less with the placing of the needle. The solid work may be done either in the regular satin-stitch or in the newer Hohlenstich. If the former is selected a few stitches of the working thread, taken length-wise of the leaf will serve as the necessary padding. Across this the embroidery is done in close, even stitches, and whether directly across the leaf or in a slightly slanting direction. Stitches placed at too great a slant make quick work, but the result is not so good.

If it is preferred to fill this part of the design with Wallachian knots they do no padding whatever is required, and the stitch used is the plain, round knot, or blanket stitch begun at the point and of each leaf and worked from left to right, each buttonhole stitch reaching the middle of the vein of the leaf to its outer edge and lying at right angles to it. When the buttonhole stitches radiate from this point the end of the leaf has been turned. The parallel stitches of the other half are then worked. When all the flowers and leaves have been completed, the parallel lines making the heart shaped spaces are worked in close and even stitches. These may be done with very fine embroidery thread and drawn up into a firm, close effect, or the finish, or a coarse or thread may be used and drawn up less closely, according as it is to form a heavy outline.

In working long eyelets, the running of the outline must never be omitted. After this thread has been put in the eyelet must be cut with the scissors, as the eyelets will not make the long hole necessary. When the eyelet is small, a straight cut through its center, but not reaching to the end of the eyelet, is all that is necessary. In the larger ones a second cut through the middle and at right angles to the first is necessary. This surplus linen is then included in the over and over stitches which complete the eyelet. After all the design is finished, the edges may be worked over a chain stitched padding (see illustration) and the surplus linen cut away close to the buttonhole edge. The work is then finished. wrong side up, and a narrow buttonhole stitch worked over the edge. This second row of stitches is not set close together, but at a short distance from the right side but is a great protection to the edge and prevents all fraying.

FASHION.

Lace perches in high bows on hats; it covers silk evening gowns; it forms bands and collars. It is a separate glory or combined with gold tulle.

On many of the new dresses fine English eyelets embroidery is used. It is laid over and over this pattern, and the eight angles to it, and in close, even stitches. One of the most satisfactory threads for padding is the ordinary white darning cotton used for mending hose. Two, three, or four threads of this may be used, and may be either back-stitched in position or carried along in the old fashioned chain stitch.

Before each eyelet is punched with the stiletto in the line of stamping should be run with little even stitches. These help to strengthen the eyelet, and keep its size, and retain its shape in every small eyelets this may be omitted, if preferred, unless the material is given to splitting when the stiletto is used. Then the outlining must not be neglected. English eyelets are never buttonholed, but are done in little, close, over-and-over stitches, each set into the line of stamping.

These may be done with very fine embroidery thread and drawn up into a firm, close effect, or the finish, or a coarse or thread may be used and drawn up less closely, according as it is to form a heavy outline.

Costume Details

ILLUSTRATED are many fascinating ideas with the woman who is clever with her needle to make for herself from those many remnants picked up at the sales.

The three pieces of the Shelley collar are extremely attractive, two of them and one without a jabot. Now that there are signs of a return to the shirt, the carefully bonded bodice with the material up to the throat will make its debut in the near future. It is safe to predict that these collars will not be repatriotised to break the severity of line. The collar bands with trimmed Puritan collars look extremely smart with corsages of this persuasion and are certainly more appropriate for those who have passed the summer of life.

The attention must be drawn to the vest of turkey red, which in order to be thoroughly practical should be provided with strings to hold it in position. The model is detailed for use for wearing with fur collars and other frocks. The majority of school authorities incline to the opinion that a contrast and justly, that lace or net sleeves for children are not a success for any quite out of gone, as after they have been in use a few hours they lose their first freshness. Another advantage with the vest is that it can easily be removed.

KEEPING VEILS IN CONDITION

Care Bestowed on This Important Article of Apparel Is Worth While Financially.

The ready made lace veil will cost from two dollars and a half to four-teen dollars, and every becoming one sold by the yard is dear in proportion. So it behooves the wearer of veils to see how they can be kept in good condition. The fabric needs do not need to be bemmed at the ends, as after the veil is tied on these are turked under the knot. But such veils should be pulled out when they are taken off and rolled up from one end before they are put away. Cut curtain rollers, sawed up into pieces the width of the veil are often used for keeping the crushable nets in order. The first end of the veil is stretched tight over the stick and the rest rolled smartly over it, with every wrinkle smoothed out. For the lace veils, a piece of pasteboard the length of the veil, or a little wider, is useful for keeping them in good condition when they are not worn. Keeping the veils to a flat plate board less away from other apparel keeps them all more neatly, and the veil-wearing woman who has some sense of delicate scent in this receptacle, for the veil is the first scrap of veiling on a dress to take on a stale, disagreeable odor if badly rolled veil is in addition to the complexion, and one in which it will give the best but a look of meanness.

Sailor Suits Still Worn.

The sailor suit is always a charming style of dress for a small boy, and is equally pretty in blue serge for cold weather, and in linen duck and chambray for summer. A dark blue and white stripe with a wide collar and cuffs of the same shade of blue is a favorite suit for play, but just at present there is a preference for white and brown. For the street there should be a jacket of corset-cloth, no less with the child's coloring dark blue or brown, with a wide collar of white linen or tan linen will be more attractive.—Harper's Bazar.

POULTRY

MOTHER FOR YOUNG POULTS

Most Satisfactory Plan Is to Give First Clutch to Hens and Turkeys.

(By ROBERT L. PUTNAM.)

On large farms where black head has not gained a foothold, no single branch in the poultry department of farm is of greater possibilities than turkey raising.

Though tender during the first few weeks, they later require little care save regular feeding twice a day as an inducement to come home at night.

While many prefer the hen mother, whose brood is less liable to develop into rumblers, it cannot be denied that the turkey best understands the needs of her young.

Turkeys chafe under confinement. Their wild ancestry is not so remote that they do not love the woods and fields, that they will go to roost and insect diet.

The old turkey always protects intensely with her flock, instinctively knowing when one is tired, and at speedily settling down to let it rest. The hen, on the other hand, is all nervousness, and the tender pouts completely tired out. If she is confined to a small pen, she will droop for lack of the necessary insect food.

If her coop is placed in the edge of the woods she will scratch and find a good depopulated of insect life; and wandering beyond reach of her voice heads to ranbling if they do not fall victims to foes.

The most satisfactory plan, however, is to give turkey's time to be valuable in the early spring for laying hens. The latter will sit closely, thus driving to overcome their defects as much as possible.

She will soon commence laying again, and should be allowed to mother the second brood herself. Hatched in this way, with even care, third clutch, so managed, and have the youngest birds ready for the bull day market.

Keep Birds Clean.

Keep the birds clean at all times. Fight lice, keep the coops clean. Do not think because fifth freezes during late winter it can do no harm. When there is a mild day the refuse thaws and all the disease germs it contains are liberated, to the danger of the health of the fowls.

Select Eggs of Uniform Size.

In setting hens, or in incubating artificially the Minnesota experiment station has found best results by setting eggs of a uniform size, with smooth shell and as perfectly formed as possible.

POULTRY NOTES

Meat in some form must be fed poultry.

In Paris markets the eggs are dated, and one pays according to the fresh-ness.

Turkeys should not be allowed to roost where they are fully three months old.

Ducks and geese require deep drinking vessels, especially if their drinking is kept on land.

The best breed for egg production is one that has been bred especially for egg production and not a parlor bred.

Comparative egg-farming is carried on in parts of England which gives a profitable large dropping of eggs to a good advantage.

Whitewash is better than paint on the poultry house for the reason that it costs less and has a purifying influence as well.

An occasional substitute for green bone is the commercial meat sold by poultry supply houses.

Keep all the chicks are out of the shells the bone should be dusted for the first week or two.

The setting hen should be provided with a dust bath, a place where she can dust herself each day when she comes off the nest.

The more the hen exercises the more active will be the circulation of the blood, and consequently more blood, which means more eggs.

It pays to feed young fowls well and keep them growing. Stunted they never regain their vigor even by the most careful feeding and care.

Fowls on free range, especially in the fall, will find a large number of bugs, worms and insects that furnish them all the meat food required. Their environment becomes an important matter and those fowls which have the best environment will, other things equal, be most likely to show profit.

Hens in confinement, properly managed, will produce three times their unlimited range, though when fed from a hopper they are not so inclined to roam such a great distance.

Just Hopes.

A gentleman never snatches his trousers away from his wife when she is arranging his garters, though his position is truly humiliating when one feels, as he does, that he has not been shaved enough with which to go downtown in the morning. He is perfectly welcome to go through her purse any time and help himself to anything she can find. That is what married life means. A man should not allow his feelings to be hurt when his wife runs across loose change or a roll in his pockets; he ought to play the game and take part in little conjugal pastimes for granted.

To Pray for the Rich.

Two women promised in St. Louis have started a movement to induce 500,000 of their sex in the south to pray every day for the rich. They explain they hope by organizing systematically groups of women who will pray often and well for the more affluent, wealthy persons will be led to contribute to a fund for the evangelization of the world. Belle H. Bennett, president of the woman's missionary council of the Methodist Episcopal church south and Mrs. R. W. McDonell are the originators of the plan.

Politician and Preacher.

A politician in a western state, long suspected of crookedness and noted for his shifty ways, was finally indicted and tried. The jury was out a long time, but eventually acquitted him. After the verdict was in and the politician was leaving the courtroom, a minister who had been in jury room—probably the first instance and trial approached the politician and said: "Well, my friend, you have escaped; but you had a close shave. I trust this will be a warning to you to lead a better life and deal more fairly with your fellow men."

"That may be," the politician replied. "That may be; but I ain't pledged to any one."—Saturday Evening Post.

Improving Matters

"It was very good and neighborly of you to come to Mrs. Ashley's aid, was Mrs. Ashley to Miss Gordon, who was passing a first call. "You know we were perfect strangers out here in Englewood when we arrived last week."

"Why, George Thompkins is a friend of yours, isn't he?" asked Miss Gordon, with a smile that Mrs. Ashley thought she understood.

"Well, no, we know him," she replied. "He is a business acquaintance of my husband's, but, of course, we don't associate with him or do with him socially. He is old, isn't he? But Mr. Ashley says he's bright in business, notwithstanding his crudities.

"It often happens, doesn't it," went on Mrs. Ashley, warming to her subject, "that men who care nothing for the little attentions of life are wonderfully successful commercially? But, for my part," Mrs. Ashley went on complacently, "I'd rather my husband should have his good manners and excellent taste than all the money that aggressive people like Mr. Thompkins find it so easy to make. Shouldn't you feel that way?"

"Why, really, I never thought much about the matter," answered Miss Gordon as she took leave. "But I shall certainly be quite willing to change my mind."

Mrs. Ashley, waiting to bar with Mrs. Gordon, was not long out here in Englewood before she found that
