Letter From China

Datang, July 31, 1911.

Dear folks.

I am leaving for Ihrige with Dr. Hessig tomorrow. We expect to be gone some 20 days or more. Our mission on this trip is to distribute literature, give medical aid, and find out about the district and people. We only be able to teach them something.

I turned out my school July 1st for the summer months. We had four days of entertainment. The children sang their songs both religious and national in both Tibetan and Chinese, and went their drilling exercises. Each day guests were invited from among the citizens, merchants and officials, and they were all pleased. The largest official, both Chinese and Tibetan, were there, as well as some of humbler citizens. The Liberals showed their respect as well as appreciation by placing a silk scarf around each pupils neck, 16 in all, and some of them gave money. The merchants came in droves, and gave the pupils a good sum of "pen and ink money." The officials all came the last day in state, and made a matter of fact on that day, what a year before was impossible for that is, their presence at our Christian school. They also complimented the pupils and gave them fantasy. Peoples, Tibetans and Chinese, during the four days of their own accord, threw in 109 Rupees, or U. S. coin, 52 dollars. These 16 pupils were made the happiest children in Batang, and we could make more just as happy, if we had the means.

After school was out, I went up on the mountain side to cool three hours ride from here, to visit a Tibetan village. I stayed two days and two nights there, received presents from the natives, and also gave presents. Thanks came first however. They visited me and I visited them. I ate their dainties and drank their butter tea, and they in turn with me. We chatted and joked and laughed and had a jolly good time.

One funny thing happend, the night before I came home several of the village people came to my shopping place. While there an official letter, written Tibetan running hand came in, and one in the room, not known a Lama, could read it. It was passed to me, and I read it and explained it to them. This was one source of amusement for the evening.

I visited a small Lamasary, while there and one old Lama invited me to his little shack, a gave me a bunch of flowers. I gave him a future to show my appreciation, and left the poor old ignorant fellow alone. He invited me to return, and said he would race me some flower seeds, so we could have some like that next summer.

Since I came home some of these villagers have come to my place of their own accord, to drink tea.

Dr. Hessig and I hope to have a good trip, and be back to Natives, and they love him.

With as much love as ever,

Mrs. Ewing.

After Many Years

During the past week Uncle Enoch Hall, who has been living with his son-in-law, Mr. Ben Hall, on Stoner, has been here on a visit to relatives and friends. Uncle Enoch is now in his eighty-second year, and is hale and hearty. He is a native of Nicholas county, and left here in the forties, and went to Missouri, where he has since resided. He has been a successful farmer, and has accumulated a handsome competency. He is a man of the highest character, and has always been a consistent member of the Christian church. He has been a widower for many years, and has no children living. He is visiting relatives and friends in this county, and will return to his home in Missouri in a few weeks.

Was Once a Printer

Dr. Henry S. Pendleton, who died in Washington, District of Columbia, on Monday last, was born in Paris, Bourbon county, Kentucky, November 1, 1826. He was educated at Georgetown college, graduating in 1845. He was married to Miss Mary Hutchcraft, of Maysville, Kentucky, in 1847. He was a printer by trade, and was employed on the Maysville Eagle, Louisville Journal and Louisville Courier-Journal. He was ordained to the Baptist ministry in 1850, and was pastor of churches in Kentucky, Missouri and Virginia. He was a member of the Virginia legislature in 1869-70, and was chaplain of the United States senate in 1871-72. He was a member of the Kentucky legislature in 1879-80. He was a trustee of Georgetown college for many years, and received the degree of D. D. from that institution in 1853. He was a member of the Baptist general convention of the United States for many years, and was president of the Baptist Educational society of the District of Columbia at the time of his death.

KEEP THEIR MEMORY GREEN

Frenchmen Delight in Pilgrimages to the Tomb of Poet or Notorious.

The stated hours of Honore de Balzac's tomb in the Pere la Chaise cemetery in Paris are from sunrise to sunset on August 18. There visitors are admitted to the tomb of the famous romancer, and there they may see the simple stone slab which covers the remains of the author of "The Human Comedy" and many other novels. Balzac died in 1850, and his tomb is one of the most visited in the cemetery. Frenchmen delight in pilgrimages to the tombs of their great writers, and the tomb of Victor Hugo, which is in the Pantheon, is visited by thousands of persons every year. Hugo's tomb is a plain stone slab, like that of Balzac, and is inscribed with the single word "Victor."

Many persons visit the tomb of Alphonse Daudet, the novelist, in the cemetery of Montparnasse, and the tomb of Alexandre Dumas, the elder, in the cemetery of Villers-Cotterets. Many persons visit the tomb of Victor Noir, a young journalist who was killed in a duel by Prince Pierre Bonaparte in 1870. The prince was tried for the murder and acquitted. The tomb of Victor Noir is in the cemetery of Neuilly, and is surmounted by a bronze statue of the young journalist, which represents him lying dead on the ground. The statue is considered a masterpiece, and is the work of Jules Dalou, a sculptor who was a friend of Victor Noir and attended his funeral.

Many persons visit the tomb of Marshal Ney, who was executed in 1815 for treason to the Bourbons. The tomb is in the cemetery of Pere la Chaise, and is marked by a simple slab of stone. Many persons visit the tomb of Marshal Davout, who died in 1823, and is buried in the cemetery of Montparnasse.
