WOOLLY APHIDES CAUSE MUCH DAMAGE TO THE FRUIT TREES

Hundred Species Attack Tenderest and Youngest Parts, Hence Best-Winged Greatest Amount of Spraying, Says Kesterson

Woolly aphides, which usually are not noticed until they have done considerable damage to the fruit trees, are the most numerous and most destructive of the insects which attack the tenderest and youngest parts of the trees. They are found in great numbers on the leaves and young shoots of the trees, and they are the cause of much of the damage done to the trees.
