SYNOPSIS.

George Anderson and wife are a respectable Quaker man and wife of the Clermont hotel, took around Fortune, a young man who had been found in the hall. He is brought down to the dining room and tells the story of his life. He is the son of Mrs. Ruth Elliott, a widow, who lives in Boston. He describes the room in which he was born. The first real memory of his life was of a beautiful woman in Philadelphia and that Miss Challoner was her name. Fortune's mother, Jessie Hamilton, and Rosamond, are returned to take up the case. Mr. Challoner tells of the finding of the child. Mrs. Challoner, also, signed, tells a story that is very strange one, which shows that the writer of the letter to Mrs. Challoner was known as Orlando Gardiner. Fortune is shown with Breakenridge to identify Brotherton, who is found to be Orlando Gardiner, the writer of the letter. He is arraigned. Breakenridge tells the coroner Miss Challoner received the letter and showed it to him. Fortune is found guilty. Rosamond, daughter of the daughter of a washerwoman to which Fortune was taken, is found to be the daughter of Miss Challoner by Orlando Gardiner. Rosamond gets Fortune's release. Fortune is found to be the son of Jessie Hamilton by her husband, Ruth Elliott. Fortune's mother and Rosamond visit him and confess the wrongs they have done him. Fortune is offered one of the finest farms in Chester county, which he rejects. Brotherton, who confesses to the murder of Orlando Gardiner, is found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to be hanged. Fortune's father is found to be Orlando Gardiner, who was murdered by Brotherton. He declares the letters were forgeries. Fortune's mother is found to be exonerated by the letters. Fortune is triumphant at once. The discovery is made that Orlando Gardiner is not dead, but is known to have left Philadelphia for Paris to search for the second son of Mrs. Challoner. Fortune's mother and Rosamond go to Paris to search for Orlando. He is found acting as nurse for Oswald Challoner, who is found to be the son of Mrs. Challoner. Fortune is found to be the son of Mrs. Challoner's brother but in the words, "Orlando Gardiner" is found to be "O. Brotherton," taken his brother's name.
