Sherlock however, affirms that this is not uncommon among soldiers.

KILLING THE TIME

By OTTO KRUGER.

With her small nose pressed against the screen door, the small neighbor looked wistfully into the cool depths of neighbor's kitchen.

"Come and play with me," she coaxed. "There isn't a soul of a son to play with me at my house; daddy's gone to town and my mother's gone to town and my grandmother's sewing me a dress and Hilda's using bread (ach) you can't come and play?"

"I'm afraid I can't just now," responded the grownup neighbor. "I'm busy myself. But you can come in and talk to me while I work."

The small neighbor opened the door and skipped in with alacrity.

"Why aren't you at school?" inquired the grownup neighbor as she dove diamond behind her platter.

The small neighbor gave an embarrassed wriggle. "Well," she said, "I said this morning when I first got up—I was when I first didn't go to school, I said I don't feel very well. My head aches something fierce. So my mother she said if I kept on not feeling well, I didn't need to go to school. I went in bed till she went to town and then I didn't go to school."

"I'm glad you're feeling better," said the grownup neighbor, politely. "I suppose in a little while you'll have entirely recovered."

"I shouldn't be surprised," agreed the small neighbor.

She meditatively dipped into the open flour bin one small hand, over which there was a slightly brownish film, as though it might possibly have been dipped into a mud pie.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," she cried, and play my new piece," she volunteered after a pregnant pause.

"Do," urged the grownup neighbor, cheerfully.

The small neighbor disappeared into the dining room and finally the piece" could be heard from the living room in a few moments. It was a certain returned.

"I wrote a beautiful piece all by myself," she announced. "I guess you don't you think I play it nice?" she inquired with proper modesty.

"Yes, it was beautiful," replied the grownup neighbor. "I wish you'd come you run back and play it once more and by that time I'll be through and ready to play with you."

When the second musical feast was over the culinary artist had returned to her task and finally completed it. "Now, what do you want to play with?" she asked.

The small neighbor reflected. "Do you remember the piece I played for you when I was here you made candy?" she presently inquired. "I'm sure you did remember the occasion. The small one trembled from top to toe assently and ingenuously. "Do you remember, she said, "I was nervous and her how good that candy tasted?"

Am I do you remember?" the grownup neighbor, "that I was nervous and how good that candy tasted?"

I think I would," responded the other.

But you have a headache," continued the grownup neighbor quickly. "Don't you remember how I said I didn't like eating any candy even if I was nervous?"

The small neighbor looked up at her from the floor where she had crawled as she detected the footprints of a cat in the cement floor. "I'm just making fun. You'll let me have more candy, won't you? Some good and lovely good. I could eat a bushel of it and it would only make me a little sick."

"I'm afraid," said the grownup neighbor, "that you've been eating candy on the stove and the small visitor hastily assented that she had been in trouble. "But the awful accusing tone in the grownup voice made the small neighbor's face very red indeed.

"I'm afraid you've been eating candy on the stove," she asked.

But now the small neighbor was ready to confess to the effect that she had been getting her self candy. "I'm getting fat on candy apples," inquired the grownup neighbor, "and candy and candy and candy?"

Well, you're not brown and without a single freckle. I have I could see my finger into you."

"I guess I do," I don't mind being spoiled," chirped the small one. "I never have a mother and I guess I'm always around her friends a neck. The grownup neighbor gave her a severe hug. "I'm simply flattered to death," she declared.

Etiquette of the Sofa.

The "etiquette of the sofa," in One mode is indeed, the profound mystery which it has been considered. The correspondent declared it to be. We offer no explanation of the sofa's claim to be the ground of honor, but in Germany it is the place of honor, and in Germany we suppose it is the visitor must sit on it unless somebody is invited to sit on it.

To take a seat there unasked is an unforgivable presumption. Strictly according to the rank, wealth and standing of the visitor, the "host" must be the entitled and so on to the lowest embody before the spinster. It is an offense a mother as the daughter's disparting of her guests for the dinner table—London Chronicle.

Remington Typewriter Company

Official Distributors

A fitting climax to the opening of the Panama Canal will come with the great Exposition at San Francisco. The plans are complete. The beautiful de luxe Booklet of the Exposition is now ready.

A big question confronted the Exposition authorities: "How shall we get this handbook into the hands of intelligent people—everywhere?"

The problem was as big as the world's map. Various methods were considered and declined.

Final judgment pointed to this most appropriate and logical way—The Remington Typewriter Company was selected as the official distributor. Why?

—Because the Remington Typewriter Company is known throughout the commercial world as such either in written language ——

—Because the 658 Remington offices which dot the earth are supply stations for the most remote points in the two hemispheres.

To indicate further its belief in the Remington Typewriter, the Exposition management will type all its official letters on Remington machines. For the use of visitors, hundreds of Remingtons will be installed in the Exposition grounds.

What the Book Contains:

The illustrated de luxe Booklet of the Panama Exposition answers many interesting questions concerning the Exposition and the Canal.

For instance — Why at Panama will the sun rise out of the Pacific Ocean and set in the Atlantic? What were the climatic conditions which the 50,000 canal workers had to face on that strip of tropic land? How will they make it safe to pass a great steamship through the canal? How will this vast national enterprise affect the Nation's trade routes and the world's commerce? How will the Exposition be staged? What will visitors see when they get there?

This handsome booklet is full of beautiful colored picture illustrations of the canal, as well as several double-page maps.

You will do well to get a copy of this beautiful booklet while you're about it. Simply write us a letter in accordance with our arrangement with the Exposition, we are now distributing free.

Call at our local office and we shall be glad to give you a copy.

COMMENT

If good newspaper men may be made in schools, Enoch Grehan will make 'em in his School of Journalism, at State University. Editor Louis Landrum, of the Danville Messenger, suggests that the embryonic journalists be given elementary courses in sweeping out the office, washing rollers, setting a little old style plea, and standing off the bill collector. The suggestion of the Boyle county editor is a good one, if the journalistic cubs have any flunkerings after the "flowery beds of ease" of country newspaperdom. But they won't have. Nine tenths of Grehan's boys will want to buck the city "game"; and Enoch will get 'em one to that camp grounds.

A pump, 300 feet long was installed last week, and continuous pumping, for something like twenty-four hours, it is said failed to effect the depth of the water in the well to any extent. The company is very enthusiastic over the new venture, and a larger and more powerful plant will be erected at once and the water placed on tap.

He was an ex-Confederate soldier, having enlisted in the 9th Kentucky in 1861, and was sergeant in Company D, Ninth Kentucky Infantry, under Captain Ben Grehan. Mr Wall was the son of the late Major William Wall, of Clementine Wall and was about 74 years old.

Col. J. Roe Young Here In Interest Of Candidacy

Colonel J Roe Young, of Maysville, who has announced as a candidate for Congress in this district, was here Friday in the interest of his race. The Maysville Bulletin commenting affectionately on his candidacy says:

Mr. Young is a native of Bath county and resided in Nicholas for several years before taking up his residence in this city. In each of the above named counties he will have a strong following, but he expects a large vote in every county in this district.

"Colonel Young is a son of the late John D. Young, who represented this district in Congress in the early 70's and after a lapse of nearly half a century his son is seeking a seat in Congress."

Enquirer Tips Camden For Winner Of Short Term Race

(Special to Cincinnati Enquirer)

Washington, July 5.—All of the information that reaches Washington from Kentucky in regard to the hotly fought Senatorial contests in that State points to Senator Bradley as the probable winners of the Democratic senatorial nomination in the primaries in August.

Short term nomination for the term ending March 4, next, Johnson N. Camden.

Long term nomination for the six year term beginning March 4, 1915, Ollie M. James and Ben W. Beckham.

There is no other Senatorial campaign in the country that is being watched more closely from Washington than that of progress in Kentucky. Both Camden and Beckham are regarded as close personal and political friends of President Wilson, and their nomination would be received with satisfaction at the White House.

New Mineral Well Near Park's Hill Is Success

At a meeting of the Moorefield Oil & Gas Co., which was held Monday night, it was decided to change the name of the incorporation, which in the future will be styled The Upper Blue Licks Mineral Springs Co., Incorporated.

The new incorporation will engage in the bottling and sale of mineral water, having struck a splendid flow of this water from one of the wells on the farm of Dick Moore, at a point quarter of a mile from the intersection of the Parks Ferry and Cassiday turnpikes and about one-half mile from the historic old Park's Hill campground.

Gen. Bennett H. Young opened his campaign for the Democratic nomination for the short term in the United States Senate Saturday at Nicholasville. The "short term" is for the period from November 6th to March 4th. The other Democratic candidates are: Senator Johnson N. Camden and ex-Congressman Dave Smith.

Decrease In Burley Acreage Shown By Enquirer Report

Throughout the Burley belt there prevailed a variety of conditions, but most sections suffered from the prolonged drouth, which up to the time of this report has been broken but little. Farmers had planned to raise an average burley crop, and never before were the plant beds so large or so promising as in 1913 and 1914. dry weather however, retarded the growth of the young plants in the beds, and those which were set out early were literally baked in the ground. Even at the close of July many fields were still unplanted, and by that time the plants in the beds were too large to be transplanted. A large number of the latter will be made as follows: Ohio, 9,000; West Virginia and scattering, 10,000 acres; total, 1,000,000 720 acres. The total estimated burley acreage for the crop of 1913 last season was 295,000 acres, which was a decrease of 7,000 acres or 2 per cent. is indicated. The harvested burley area in 1912 was 196,111 acres, and it is likely that the usual abandonment of the crop during the growing season will result in a similar relatively decrease at harvesting time this year. The harvested area in 1912 was 215,315 acres; 1911, 183,089 acres; 1910, 254,000; 1909, 274,000 acres.

The average yield per acre in the burley tobacco section fluctuates between 900 and 1,000 pounds, and upon a basis of 925 pounds to the acre the total crop yield of 1914 may be estimated at 182,957,250 pounds. The estimated burley yield last year at planting time was 189,000,000 pounds and the heaviest yield was reported at 176,869,600 pounds in 1912 and 175,375,000 in 1912 was 205,131,000 pounds; 1911, 174,488,700 pounds; 1910, 298,478,000 pounds. —[Cincinnati Enquirer.

The VALIANTS of VIRGINIA

By HALLIE ERMINIE RIVES (Mrs. POST WHEELER)

ILLUSTRATED by LAUREN STOUT

An hour dragged slowly by and a length she rose and went slowly out into the street. Her head felt intolerably heavy, but it did not ache. Outside her mother's door, as was her custom, she paused mechanically to listen. A tiny pencil of light streaked through the darkness and painted a spot of bright gold on her gown. It came from the keyhole; the lamp in her mother's room was burning. She has fallen asleep and forgotten it," she thought, and hurrying the knob, pushed the door noiselessly open and entered.

A moment she stood listening in the house, the voice of Mad Anthony, as it had entered in her ear on the door-step of the negro cabin, with the well-away threats. Its long central shadow across the grass of laughing Jack.

"Ah sees yo' gwine ter him. Ah hates de white-haired devil worst'n I do sight—ez yo' gwine."

Then wait, dear wait, it's little, or trouble-cloud yoke kyah him long. Ah'll be back." Then he drank another thirteen—when do clock strike thirteen.

She dropped the flowered curtain and drew back. A weird fancy had begun to prey on her brain. Had not Mad Anthony foretold that very hour since before? What if there were truth in his words, that he, the devil, as he was and that the two halves clasped had become for them? Was not the picture most be Sassoon's, and was not the figure of the man lying welled up through her own despair, like the sound of a bell? Surely, she started as she did so, for the first time in the fate of Sassoon's son of John Valiant.

Then the memory she stayed suddenly. Then recollection of the resemblance that had struck her when she looked at her, and also the fact that it must have been Sassoon's son. Mad Anthony had spoken of. Why had she never carry to secret the fact that Sassoon's son was living? Why had she not carried him to her home? Why had she not carry to secret the fact that Sassoon's son was living?

Shirley's breath stopped. She felt her face tingling and a curious weakness in her limbs. Why, indeed, was she not? Why had she not carried him to her home? Why had she not carried him to her home? Why had she not carried him to her home? Why had she not carried him to her home?

Thoughts raced, tumbling in pairs over the fourteen of May and the open [illegible] Why had she not been [illegible] to Valiant than to Sassoon? Why had she not carried him to her home? Why had she not carried him to her home? Why had she not carried him to her home?
