FIFTEENTH INSTALLMENT

DRIVING THE LAST SPIKE

It was a week that this work had been going on. The mountain was being built up, and the railroad was being laid out. The work was hard, but the men were determined to finish it. They had been working for weeks, and now they were at the end. The last spike was to be driven, and the railroad was to be completed. The men were excited, and they were all working hard. They had to be careful, for the mountain was steep, and the work was dangerous. But they were determined to do it. They had to be careful, for the mountain was steep, and the work was dangerous. But they were determined to do it.

CUT-OFF SUPERSTITION

At the time of the construction of the mountain railroad, there were many superstitions. The men were afraid of the dark, and they were afraid of the mountain. They were afraid of the ghosts, and they were afraid of the evil spirits. They were afraid of the bad luck, and they were afraid of the bad omens. They were afraid of the bad things, and they were afraid of the bad people. They were afraid of the bad things, and they were afraid of the bad people. They were afraid of the bad things, and they were afraid of the bad people.

While for freedom and life, and that meant to have the freedom of the mountain. The men were afraid of the dark, and they were afraid of the mountain. They were afraid of the ghosts, and they were afraid of the evil spirits. They were afraid of the bad luck, and they were afraid of the bad omens. They were afraid of the bad things, and they were afraid of the bad people. They were afraid of the bad things, and they were afraid of the bad people.
