FINE TOBACCO LAND

Within One Mile Of Carlisle

For Sale at Public Auction

Saturday, December 22

At 1:30 o'clock, P. M.

on the premises one mile from Carlisle, Ky., I will, as agent for the GRAETER HEIRS, expose at public outcry one half of their fine farm lying about one mile from Carlisle. The land will be sold first in two tracts and then as a whole.

This farm has no improvements on it, and is practically all first-class tobacco land, nearly the entire acreage never having felt the tickle of a plow, and none of it plowed to any extent.

The whole tract contains from 125 to 150 acres and will be divided and surveyed prior to the day of sale. It is practically certain that a new pike will be built along the entire front at a very early date, proceedings now pending assuring this fact.

Every acre of this tract of land is susceptible of cultivation and will grow good tobacco or any other crop grown in this country.

At this time when all kinds of crops are bringing such magnificent prices this land should be particularly in demand as ONE CROP WILL PAY FOR THE LAND.

The time of sale is set for 1:30 P. M., Saturday, December 22, 1917, so as to allow ample opportunity for prospective purchasers to get a look at the land. In buying this land you are not paying for extensive and extravagant improvements, but for the land alone.

This is an opportunity that comes very rarely to get GOOD LAND without a great lot of improvements that are not wanted. Then all this land lies within a mile of Carlisle so that it can be used by a city resident without running miles out in the country to look after your stock, crops, etc.

RAISE MORE HOGS.

The Food Production Committee of the National Food Administration for Kentucky, realizing the seriousness of the food situation the world over, and the vital benefit it will have on the winning of the war, has undertaken the campaign of elementary call the attention of our fellow farmers to the following:

First there is a great shortage of hogs in the United States, and there is known for nothing. Whether the war end, within the next year or so, there is a more pressing necessity for an increase in the production of hogs and hog products and prices will continue high.

The United States Food Administration, through Herbert Hoover, has announced that it will not sell before a minimum of $15.50 basis of top hogs on the Chicago market.

Judge Julius Tinch needs thousands of hogs to feed the soldiers and sailors. He is feeding material all over the Smith-land that cannot be profitably marketed except through feeding it to hogs. We have an abnormally large corn crop and much of it must be fed.

Each patriotism and profit call the farmers to raise more hogs. Every farmer should raise at least one sow to his farm. Breed and feed to the limit. Carefully and intensively the pain.

So the sentiment runners of the nine Kentucky districts have met and to-day in Bowling to the summit.

Before the ambulance corps could enter, there came one of those howling blizzards so dreaded in the rough northern country, and there was nothing for it but to retreat and take refuge in the Pullman cars. Here the big house proved a hard nut to crack, but the boys finally managed to get through, and after a hot meal and a roaring fire going in the stove. The plucky lads got back from the dressing-station, and everybody thanked his lucky stars to be safe and sound on the side the storm roared and the trees bent and swayed in the gale. Before the blizzard ended, the boys had a fine time. It was reported that Mary Martha Brooks-gray knew pure old, he actually also brought a pail of water so but the Blade, and Mrs. Brooks, who was in the swollen sable into it, and these two girls, who had been out in the cold and rich fare and many other fine things. Then the ambulance corps in the train heart to tell Mrs. Brooks about it. When He called Thee home to rest.

Funeral was conducted at home by Rev. Linville, burial in the Elizabethtown cemetery. A FRIEND.

A Really Truly Christmas Tree

BY CHARLES S. PEASE

Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.

Of course you want to know if I still have a Christmas tree on my ranch more than the one you had last year, so I shall explain that the tree Ralph and Rhoda had by accident one winter was rooted in the ground in the Late Superior woods.

First you must be told that the town children up there had the good times in both summer and winter, but the winters were the best, for then the trees all the year around, and there's the reason why mother said to Ralph and Rhoda the day before Christmas: "I don't see how you two are going to have a happy holiday when the children up at the mines do not expect to have any tree at all. How would you like to go up the mountain and hew down a tree for the children?" But you can get back before dark. I will telephone the mine captain that you are coming."

"Just the very thing," said the children. And away they went, each one with a sled loaded with everything you can think of for a Christmas tree, lots of gifts and royal trimmings for a feast.

They were making good time along the mountain side when Rhoda stumbled over a tree.

When she tried to stand up again her ankle would not bear.

Of course Rhoda would not hear of leaving the unlucky tree behind. "Come!" is the sure and coasting back down the mountain. We can get it. Ralph will be more used to it than I am, and then we locked and hurried. Before they decided on what to do next a sleigh of the mine children came racing down the road. It stopped, and the driver of the sleigh had emptied the settings in a jiffy.

"We come to help take the Christmas tree to the mines," he said. "Mother sent us. We heard your sled coming down the mountain side and knew it was you."

Then Rhoda told how she had hurt her ankle. "I'm afraid I can't walk," she wouldn't listen to a word of it. "Ralph and I can get the tree. We're pretty trimmed and hung with those things," she said, pointing to the sleigh load, "and you can ride back on the sled, lying of the sturdy and determined Ralph, and ignoring the pain.

So the earliest runners of the mine children got the tree down to the road and to Rhoda in the sleigh.

Before the ambulance corps could enter, there came one of those howling blizzards so dreaded in the rough northern country, and there was nothing for it but to retreat and take refuge in the Pullman cars. Here the big house proved a hard nut to crack, but the boys finally managed to get through, and after a hot meal and a roaring fire going in the big stove. The plucky lads got back from the dressing-station, and everybody thanked his lucky stars to be safe and sound on the side the storm roared and the trees bent and swayed in the gale. Before the blizzard ended, the boys had a fine time. "A Little Child Shall Lead Them"

CHRISTMAS is the apotheosis of childhood. It is the glory of the little ones.

We celebrate this festival in honor of the Christ child, the sacred child of northern song, fighting its dull sides by the natural love of love in human hearts.

There is not in all this land a home where the true spirit runs through the day where the mother and father gather the children more closely to shelter them, but the Christmas truth is shining through for the poor.

There is not a homeless boy who by the fireside of a hotel or restaurant, or who by the cheery grate in the back of the alley, not a little fellow up under the rafters of the poor house on the county farm, not a foundling left in a basket at the rich man's door, not a shivering, tiny girl scuffled for a fight with the storm, but the new truth of the Christmas spreads its wings over them.

"When I was weak, then am I strong." Who is weak? Who is infirm upon his feet and wavering in strength? Who is old of the northeast wind? Who says: "I am better; yes, I think I am getting better. But somehow I do not get any richer back?" Who leans up against the sale of goods in the hall-way, and wonders if he will ever be able to go back to work his route? Who has been blind?

To all of you the Christmas has its morning. There never was a conqueror like the child in the cradle. God hath chosen the weak things to confound the mighty. For 2,000 years the history of the world's civilization has been the story of the struggle between the weak and the triumph of suffering well. The race is not to the swift nor battle to the strong. Every letter of that sentence is eternally true.

The grandest things that were ever done on earth were done by men and women who had the spirit of the child. The greatest poem ever written was the sweet-faced little child. It is everything for the child, heaven pleases well harvest, all gold, all schools, all trade, all government, all the coming better times. Christmas means "And a little child shall lead them."—Emory A Haven in New York World.

Christmas Riddance

BY WILLIS BROOKS

Of village paper had heaved a very significant editorial sentiment. I was looking over the news matter by the front window). My wife sat near, absorbed in the story port.

"What's that?" she asked, looking. She was always on the lookout for anything that might be particularly sad and added like a key announcing the arrival of one-twelfth of a dozen.

"This," I answered, "is Kitty Burnstable in a state of amusement."

We looked through the window, and, sure enough, here he came down the street, an excessive smile illuminating his countenance.

"What's the matter with the man he added, as about all alone?" my wife wanted to know. She was that waiting never content to be a mule to hungry unless she knew the reason why.

So I went to the door and near out to Kitty, "Say! it kind of stingy to see you so happy by yourself?"

When he had answered the road thoroughly, and had got his breath back from the whole-hearted laugh that he gave the shepherd for him he leaned back and cut glance the fellow members with large doorfish of his sharp countenance. "I've heard of Santa Claus playin' tricks before now," said he, "but I don't guess he ever better played none so finnder than this.

"It was the first Three four days ago we buy Chet some home with a farm to wearing with them.

Much of our information about the early days of the Christian era comes down from the monks of the fourteenth century, who derived their knowledge from source done lost to the world. They were a set of men who lived in a world of their own, devoting themselves to the three monks, the wise men, very three great Egypt called Caspar, Melchior and Balthasar. Caspar was the eldest and from the North. At the time of the birth of Christ he was sixty years old, and for more than two-thirds of a year but one watch anywhere says he, "Now I'm not sayin' that I'm sorry, but I'm sure glad he's not with us, and it was a mighty Christmas.

"I went the hole in his mit's eye, and I felt sorry for Chet, so I says, 'Chet,' says I, 'seems like you're going to be born along of me.' Has I was goin' to be born.

"That satisfied his ma. So Chet set down and began to make a book and he wrote a letter to Santy Claus and the thing 'd freeze to death if we stay in the barn any longer. Then he went and loaned his son wouldn't listen to his dyin' shot, so I puts him say in going rid of it by lendin' his Crusoe. At the same time we gived it to him for a letter to Christmas present.

"Well, when Chet got explained, he say widow's mother, boy. You remember my wife's brother, Jess Baker, down in Cooler township, the one that died and left a widder with eight children?

"That, when Chet told me about he pair to do about it, I says I'll keep the rabbit in the attic till Christmas, and then I'll take it down to Jess Baker. It jes like announcing bright as my self to choose the half family—Mis' Baker and the half-eight children.

"Chet, he hadn't even got up yet, but I hurried him up, and we chore down he bolt Artie about the Jimmy thing he was going to give him. Then Mis' Baker chips in an' says she never heard of Santy Claus, and we had to explain to her and the others grip the same thing. 'It notice the others look sort o' sad, so I says, 'Don't worry none.

"'I seen trouble comin' in Chet in Arkan-sa' home an' I were in myself they'r just one way to settle this fit-ter, an' that is to get a rabbit a little bit off on the face of the earth that don't know what kit him. So I season up to the artic' an' she hunts them bad got there ahead o' me.'

"Jess Baker had and let out a few more sincere notes of merriment.

"'What had happened?' says wife nobody.

"'Well 'till I tell you,' said Enos. "I asked Chet to come on quiet, an' I became a remote. 'Look here,' says I to Jess, 'you give eight rabbit these to the children an' the old man in Mis' Baker. If you do also also won't refuse 'em, 'specially when the little rabbits needs the services of Jimmy for awhile yit.' So Chet he hugged the rabbit and we explained to Jess about such a wicked proposal that caused the widder couldn't do nothin' but thank him an' take the half mess home with her.'

Few Christmas Toys There.

Throughout the colonies in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries toys were almost unknown. Indeed, but whenever Christmas observances were kept up there was much merrymaking and good cheer over the abundant and rich and poor, old and young, joined in the games, abundant food and general atmosphere. In the eighteenth century toys began to make their appearance in the colonies. Some of these were brought from overseas and have the enchanting quality of novelty. Lifesize dolls were the delight of little girls' grandmothers and one would be delighted with dolls that were all their own, to fondle and cuddle. A toy was a thing to be cherished in those days.—Chambers.

Christmas on Christmas Island.

They never have any "white" Christmas on Christmas Island. The thermometer never falls below 70 and never rises above 90 in the shade.

Christmas Island lies about 230 miles south of the equator in the Pacific ocean. It is in the Gilbert group and belongs to Great Britain, having been annexed in 1895. This interesting little bit of land in mid-ocean appears to have been originally a coral reef, which by volcanic forces has been raised so high that at its highest point it stands out of the water 1,000 feet. In shape it is almost circular and has an area of about twenty square [illegible].

The Ladies of the Presbyterian church will have their annual sale, December 24, in the [illegible] store room.
