

MEETING DEADLY GAS ATTACKS

THE United States Army is today prepared to meet the gas attacks of the enemy, the most deadly of which is phosgene gas. This gas is a colorless, odorless, and tasteless gas which is heavier than air and is highly poisonous.

It is not only the gas which is deadly, but also the smoke which is produced by the gas. This smoke is also highly poisonous and is a great danger to the soldier who is exposed to it.

The small respirator mask was used for the first time in the gas attack at Ypres in 1915. It was a simple mask which was made of a piece of cloth and was held in place by a strap.

The gas attack at Ypres was a great disaster for the Allies. It was the first time that gas was used in a large-scale attack. The gas was used by the Germans and it was very effective.
