

New Halifax Rises From Ruins

Handsomes Homes Replace Those Demolished in the Great Disaster One Year Ago

HALIFAX, N.S., Dec. 17.—The city of Halifax was built on a site that was almost entirely destroyed by the disaster of 1917. Today, the city is a new one, with handsome homes replacing those that were destroyed. The reconstruction has been a remarkable feat, and the city is now a more beautiful and modern one than ever before.

The disaster of 1917 was a tragedy that destroyed the city of Halifax. The explosion of the munitions ship, the Imo, on December 6, 1917, resulted in the deaths of 2,964 people and the destruction of 1,600 buildings. The city was almost entirely leveled, and the remaining buildings were in a state of ruin.

Since that time, the city has been rebuilt. The reconstruction has been a remarkable feat, and the city is now a more beautiful and modern one than ever before. The new buildings are handsome and modern, and they have replaced the old, dilapidated structures that were destroyed in the disaster.
