To Brighten Dull Tints.

Neutral colors are so popular at present that the brilliants who seek for the bright shades that were made so fashionable by the Russian ballet are often disliked. For her, however, by the art of dyeing the prevailing dullness by means of striking yellow ray or of adding some bright touch to relieve the otherwise somber effect of the costume. A waistcoat of silk or of embroidered leather is a means to this end, but the woman who catches at such accented effects must be careful to choose a style that is becoming. The "grande mademoiselle" variety, for example, with its headlong skirt and military sash, is only for her of the slender proportions.

Cost Dress.

There is much talk about the cost dress for spring, the strictly tailored suit being somewhat passe.

Crocheted neckties are used over and over as trimmings on many French dresses.

Also High-Priced Food.

Along with the high prices farmers are realizing for their live stock comes the high-priced food necessary to make the stock ready for market.

Lady Murray.

Lindley Murray was a noted Anglo-American grammarian, who lived from 1745 to 1826. He was born in Lancaster, Pa. In 1784, at the age of thirty-nine, he went to live in England, and it was there that he compiled and published his famous grammar. Both spelling books that grew him enormous fame and fortune. He died in England, and there he was buried. For many years those were the text books used in the English and American schools. His English home was at Holgate, near the city of York, and it was there that he did most of his literary work. He was a man of very retiring disposition, and extremely bashful and diffident in public. He wrote a number of books, but his grammar and spelling books were the only ones that ever brought him fame.

MUCH GOOD FOOD IN FOREST

Pioneer Knew the Value and Number of Edibles That Can Be Found There.

It is stated that Daniel Boone and other pioneers could get into the wilderness with only a rifle and a sack of salt and live in comfort on the game and other wild food which the woods afforded. While few people would care to do that, there is much wholesome food in the forest, and the value of fruits of our native trees and edible nuts, according to those who take to use them to good advantage is rapidly increasing their foods.

Aside from the numerous edible berries, roots, fruits of shrubs and other plants, the trees of our forests yield a large variety of edibles which are highly prized by woods connoisseurs. Sap is taken from the maples, walnuts, chestnuts and chinquapins, and birch, and several kinds of hickory nuts, including pecans. The kernels of all of these are not only delicious foods, but highly nutritious, and are being used in increasing quantities in the manufacture of the leanest in milk and cakes. Indeed, it is said that the pecan and walnuts are now used by some of the Indians for various purposes. The Indians, it is said, also formerly mixed chestnuts with nuts and made a bread which was baked in corn husks, like tamales. In the Southern states the persimmon is sometimes used in the chestnut crop is being used in the manufacture of flour, which is said to be very nutritious and palatable.

Keep Promises Made Children.

If failure to keep promises is evil to the children, how much more serious it is to the children in the home, the conduct of the parents is observed by the children. None should be lightly made, and all should be kept if possible. Children are quick to detect insincerity misrepresent things. If one would have the confidence of children he must first be true. They should early learn that the home is sacred to promises. One has no right to promise to do that which he has determined or has not to keep to promise, one has no right to promise to do that which he has determined or has not to keep to promise, one has no right to promise to do that which he has determined or has not to keep to promise, one
