THE BANK THAT DIDN'T FAIL.

This is the story of a bank. Not one of those banks that stand on the most impressive corner of Main dollars, and the size able to ask eight Street, with a row of marble pillars in front and portly depositors coming and going in their new automobiles. That bank is made of tin, shaped like a little house, measures exactly five inches, and looks like a child's toy.

As a matter of fact it was intended for a child's toy. But an old exchange man got to smoke more. And those banks, at Bank, and [illegible] to close eggs for new savings. Not a bank in the country that is safer, surer, sounder.

It belonged to Mary Brown's little brother. He had grown up and discarded it, and she found it one day.

"I've been meaning to save toward a new set of furs," Mary Brown asserted. Inducee 10 cent books and no Jimmy's old bank." She popped in a dollar.

She works in an office down town and gets twenty a week. She had never put away a dollar of that money. She always found so many things to spend it on as the week along, and living at home makes one careless. People sometimes talked to her about saving for the rainy day, but she kept putting it off.

The next week when she drew her salary she popped two dollars into the slot. She liked the rattle of them, she decided she could save two more. The next week she did the same thing and added to the bank again. By the sixth week she had set to thinking.

"I never know how fast money would accumulate until I put it where I can't get it out," she said. The furs are nearly bought already."

Suddenly it occurred to her, "Do really need those furs after all?" My old ones aren't so bad. What I'm really enjoying is not the prospect of the furs; it's the fact that I'm adding away extra money at home."

It gave me a substantial feeling, as if I were a real factor in life, a member of the society of This World. And so another how small that bank can make you!

Suddenly he was inspired on an announcement:

"LIBERTY BONDS, FOUR PER CENT.—"

It was the physiological moment. Mary Brown opened the bank. In one of those banks that stand on the

That was the beginning. She has already saved a nice little bit in that bank. Soon she will have enough to buy a fifty-dollar bonds in the next issue.

Distance Dwarfs The Peg.

Has it ever occurred to you what might happen were the Flanders front defenses to crack beneath the German drive? What would become of France and of the Allied forces there now? What would be the fate of our army?

That is where the next front line trenches might ultimately be?

It is possible that even were the worst to come and the Germans were to break through they might still be held in check by the natural defensive conditions and engines and so long as the combined allied forces controlled the sea Germany would be powerless to attack our shores.

But we do not want to have to rely on the western front! they are going to care to risk everything in a naval battle with the fleet of England's ships. And should they succeed in such a chance be victorious the next step would be against America. Victory like this would make them masters of the world.

Distance dwarfs the fray over there for America. It is incomprehensible in all its ruthless horror and suffering so far away. We do not realize the sacrifices being made. We can not visualize it, however much we read. No man has yet adequately described it.

But we all know that we have to help those who are fighting over there. Everywhere we speak in behalf of German bonds upon American soil we are met with the cry: "Help the boys in France."

And American must do its bit to the utmost, both in men and money. It is up to us: stay at home: to buy Liberty Bonds.

Do Your Best "Bit" This Year By Determining Not To Leave a Bit Of Cultivatable Land Unplowed

There was never a time when the farmer, the farm and farm product were more in the limelight and held greater attention; a time when more depended on the intelligent cultivation of the greatest acreage than right now.

The farmer's battle with his problems and the elements is every whit as important as the battles that will be fought in the trenches of Europe. It is generally conceded that FOOD WILL WIN THIS WAR—and the growing of food is the farmer's business.
