By An American Arthur Guy Empey Soldier Who Went

CHAPTER XXV.—Continued.

The first of the things that we noticed as we went on, was the fact that the air was so clear that we could see the tops of the hills in the distance. It was a great relief after the smoke and gas that we had been breathing for so long. The sun was shining brightly, and the ground was so dry that the dust kicked up by our feet was almost unbearable. We had to wear our gas masks, but the clear air made it difficult to breathe through them. We were walking in a line, and the sound of our boots on the ground was the only sound that we heard. The hills were so high that they seemed to touch the sky. We were walking on a path that had been made by the army, and it was so narrow that we had to be careful not to fall. The ground was so rocky that our boots were worn out in places. We were walking for hours, and our legs were so tired that we could hardly walk.
