Fur and Fabric Hats.

The use of fur in the making of hats is receiving more attention each day, and the smartest shops have gone so far for the combination of felt and fabric for a large degree. The special point seems to be in making these hats as light as possible, so that there will not be any more objection to the wearing of fur than there would be to the silkiest hat. And some of furs are being used in the making of these hats, and even though the more inexpensive furs are used, they work up well and naturally bring the price of the hat much lower than with the expensive furs.

A New Metal Silk.

"Jeanne d'Arc" is the name of a new and lovely silk, so called because of its resemblance to chain armor. The fabric is threaded with gold or silver metal, and is particularly smart when made into a vestee for the tailored suit. It comes in various metal shades, in navy blue and in black, also.

BEST OF MEDICAL AND SURGICAL RELIEF FOR DISABLED HEROES OF WORLD WAR

How the Bureau of War Risk Insurance Is Meeting the Herculean Problem of Examining, Rating and Returning to Physical Usefulness Minds and Bodies Wrecked in the Great European War.

Washington—The war has brought the government face to face with a brand new series of problems. Long before the armistice was signed, confidential forecasts some of the necessities of the situation and, starting from the humanitarian standpoint that a man who has been injured in the service of his country is not an object of charity, but a person who is entitled to adequate medical and medical relief exactly as he was entitled to have his hurt at the hands of the enemy, the United States government has inaugurated.

This contemplates that the director of the bureau of war risk insurance shall take all the necessary measures to insure that any person who contracts a disease or suffered an injury in military service in the line of duty during the war with Germany shall be recompensed therefor, and that he shall receive such medical and surgical attention as will be necessary to restore him to health, or at least bring him the maximum relief possible from his particular case.

Furthermore, should this ex-soldier or sailor or marine have died as a result of, or suffered any hurt for which compensation is due under the statutory, that such apportune shall be forthcoming for his widow and child. In further advance of this plan congress has enacted enabling legislation and the department is considering a bill which will further facilitate the purpose in this regard.

National in Scope.

There is a man in Washington who says his job is long facing a gigantic group of the United States. On it is the responsibility for the welfare of a large part of the nation. Colored plan locate in Washington, headquarters, medical and surgical consultants and examining boards, all of this being the war risk bureau machinery which the government has put into action to relieve suffering promptly and to return to efficiency the men and women whose minds or bodies have been broken in humanity's cause.

Some one asked this officer why he was always out facing this gigantic task, why he lifted his eyes to it so many times during the day? The answer was: "So that I may always keep before me the fact that the problem is national in its scope and can be solved only by the nationwide breadth of vision."

When congress passed the war risk insurance act little did anyone dream of the far-reaching effect.

No human brain could have foreseen the multitudinous variety of ways in which this beneficent measure could touch the lives and happiness of thousands of Americans.

Much Detail Involved.

At first glance the problem appears easy. If a discharged soldier, sailor, marine, army or navy nurse, presents 47 or narrative can show that he or she received an injury in service or suffered an aggravation of a pre-existing injury or disease, then compensation and medical and surgical treatment, if necessary, must immediately follow. It is as simple as that to be able to say one of these persons would be entitled to $30 a month immediately upon his discharge from the military forces. But the machinery necessary for the government to perform special examinations, to employ special specialists in order to administer the act with justice to the individual and to the government.

But such is not the case. In the first place, it must be shown that a claimant was actually in the military forces of the United States. Secondly, that he suffered an injury

Appears After Discharge.

A large number of cases are on record in which the men was discharged as in good condition, and within a few days was found to have developed serious troubles which was of such a nature as to make it absolutely essential that he receive attention from the service or else lose his life. Now it is not permissible for the medical division to accept at their face value the reports of discharge boards. This is especially true when there is a absence of data.

Then, too, there is the question of those disabilities which appear some time after the man's separation from the service. Here it is necessary to call upon the adjutant general and the surgeon general for the man's medical record while in the service. This sometimes involves considerable light upon the question of determining whether military service or not. It is stated what would otherwise have been a very simple matter may in any case the burden of proof is on the claimant, and not on the bureau, which gives the benefit of the doubt.

Many Cases a Day.

Nearly the entire eighth floor of the Arlington building in Washington is occupied by the medical division of the bureau of war risk insurance. The function of this division is to pass upon the medical questions which arise in claims against the government under the war risk insurance act. It determines the character of the medical and surgical treatment of those soldiers and sailors who are entitled to hospitalization and to the necessary appliances which they may require, to overcome their disabilities and to restore them to health and return to efficiency the men and women whose minds or bodies have been broken in humanity's cause.

Some one asked this officer why he was always out facing this gigantic task, why he lifted his eyes to it so many times during the day? The answer was: "So that I may always keep before me the fact that the problem is national in its scope and can be solved only by the nationwide breadth of vision."

FRENCH SCORN YANK SMOKES

Do Without Tobacco Unless They Can Get Their Own Favorite Mixture.

Paris—The opinion of the average French smoker is that the government tobacco—Regie—is rotten. Some of the packages of American cigarettes and smoking tobacco sent to the soldiers in France by the American expedition-tobacco are prepared with greater finish and are more pleasing to the taste, but he has the habit of the old French blend of tobacco, which is rather stronger and produces a far more distinctive odor, and he wants no other.

The French brand, however, is unobtainable, and consequently the Yankee dogs but once a week. In limited quantities, and rather more afterward as a gift of those dear, generous Americans, the French smoker can get his favorite tobacco, but only infrequently for two hours, in the hope of refilling his pouch.

Couldn't Hurt That Toad

There are many surprising stories about toads, observes Philip Hale, editor of the "As the World Wags" column in Boston Herald. Here is one of them, taken from a book containing the sense and crimes of people in Surrey, Sunderland, England. In 1795 a stone mason, Mr. George Wilson, "recklessly immured" a toad in a wall he was building, making for the load a cleft in the stone. Sometime afterward the wall was pushed in 1801 for playing and laggips before a bridegroom on a Sunday. Among the women, Elizabeth Mills was brought into court for stealing and drying fish on the Lord's day.

No Wife for Him.

"This court was made by some sensible fool," said a judge in Kansas, "and in one of the pockets."

"Not I. The court was made by some old bachelor and left several on."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Sometimes he goes away disappointed, the supply having given out before his turn came, but rarely does he accept the American substitute, which is the last, safe, and, moreover, is twice as costly.

Velvet Becomes Satin's Rival

Just how it happens has never been explained, but it happens every little while that velvet and satin change places in fashion, simultaneously, of women all over the civilized world for more than half a century. Nevertheless the Merchants wake up some morning to find that the velvet which was made up her mind over night that she would wear satin, and that the fashion has changed from velvet to satin. It seems that it is the fashion to the satin fabric for which there has been a sudden demand. It seems that the people who saw this drama of demand and stocked up with velvet were disappointed and manufacturers were prepared for it.

Velvet is a comfortable material for frocks and they have determined to affirm their right to wear it. Velvet and the finest grades of velveteen, which are the best substitutes, are used for afternoon and evening frocks for the winter season. Velvet and velveteen will answer for suits, but the finest grades of velveteen for evening and chiffon velvets are in such demand that they bring almost velvet prices. The best grades of velveteen are used for the collar and cuffs of velvet. A trimmed suit of velvet and velveteen is a handsome affair and does or folds stretched and mounted with the fashion.

BLOUSE STYLES FAVORED FOR EVENING COSTUMES

It is evident that blouses and smocks are aspiring to rival evening frocks and the chances are that they are going to succeed. There is no end to the fancies which they are enlivened with rich girdles of gold or silver brocade. Embroidered in gold and silver, and occasionally mock jewels and ornaments that nothing is too splendid for the blouse which is to be worn with a velvet skirt. Fashion's decrees are that such blouses be made of fine but flimsy materials and that they be worn with a velvet skirt. Two pretty examples of the mode are shown in the illustration. One of these is of chiffon and is trimmed with bands of dark fur and the other is of georgette crepe, chiffon and net with rhinestone buckles and ornaments. Both of these blouses are to be worn with a satin band. Fur and rhinestone bands are also used for the sleeves of the latter and are finished with a satin band. CONFERENCE DISSOLVED SINE DIE

CLASHES MINGLED IN DEBATE WHEN DELEGATES FAIL TO DECIDE ON WAGE PROPOSALS.

Silence Is Maintained in Government Circles—Limitation of Prices Is At Stake—Conference Offer of Arbitration Is Defeated By Miners.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Washington.—An abrupt end came to all attempts to settle the nation-wide coal strike by peace agreement. Miners and operators passed the bleak day in conference rooms provided by the government proposal for a 14 per-cent wage increase made by Fuel Administrator Harry A. Garfield and rejecting the counter proposal of the operators for arbitration.

The conference then dissolved sine die. Participants refused to discuss the break in public circles there was no official statement. John L. Lewis, acting President of the mine workers, those of the operators refused to discuss the strike itself, which theoretically was still on, although the Federal Court injunction ordering it to be a violation of law and fer the contempt proceedings instituted, scented the Government possibly would not be disposed to press the case for some not emphasized enough, but U. S. Daugherty, of Cincinnati, counsel of the operators' committee, described the conference as unsatisfactory, and so he came out.

Mr. Garfield's proarranged plan, fortified the miners' committee for the conference with the full support of the executive of the Federal Government, was much boosted around, but T. W. Gregory, of Texas, chairman of the operators' committee, described the proposal
