HOME BEAUTIFUL

By FLORENCE HOWLTH.

(Copyright, 1919, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was an hour for dream, but Barbara Fanning's thoughts were more practical than romantic. "I've just got to forget the cold, unsympathetic figures and trust that the Lord will provide," she remarked, putting out the light, and gazing wistfully through the window, across the field, to the row of lights along the shore and beyond, where the lighthouse was blinking one, two—one, two.

When the great ancestral home had been left to her, the only living descendant of a fine race of born sea rovers, she had been alarmed almost into a panic by the prospect of being sole mistress of such an elephantine estate. Whatever could she do with a house of 50 rooms, a quiet, aristocratic woman like Barbara? She shivered heartily. How she would have loved to fill every room with children, and a husband, nursery maids and all the accouterments of a real home like Miss Alex! She was thirty-two years old, and though not bad looking, yet to the perversity say that the mere sight of a room caused her to take her head like the ostrich, and her tongue became paralyzed completely.

Her desire to do some something somehow every decade, and then figured that she could have children—some one else's to be sure—but children nevertheless. So she founded a home for the homeless, where they would through the big rooms, and grow fat and healthy in the fragrant air that blew in from the ocean. For three months it had been operating successfully.

Barbara had just finished her accounts, and was wondering how much longer income was sufficient to pay food bills and the servants' salaries, and the ever-increasing expenses of the house. But she was not one to borrow trouble before it came. How were 15 pairs of feet to be heard on the floors of the house, and 15 sturdy backs?

"The Lord must provide. He always has," reiterated, trying to throw off all care. "Why, what have we here?"

Into Miss Bertha, tugging at her skirt, "Miss Barbara, Miss Barbara, I heard a noise in the house. Listen!"

"Only the wind or a creaking stair. All houses like this are full of sounds."

But this sound was of an opening window and soft whispering.

"Midnight—midnight!"

"I declare," pronounced the man, "what else could be a burglar."

"What else could they be?" asked Barbara, with unusual curiosity. "You certainly aren't making a social call."

"Her dear Miss Fanning, as per my social stupidness, I've been a victim of a most unfortunate accident. I'm your neighbor, Philip Mead."

Barbara hardly knew how to act, for she had heard so much of Philip Mead before. "Just sit down and talk it over," she suggested, pointing to a comfortable chair.

"Oh, don't sit down," cautioned the visitor, but Barbara had already struck a match and the room was flooded with light instantly from the chair. The next thing she was standing up in a pair of shoes. A second survey betrayed a pair of socks, which were soaking wet, legs before the fireplace, and outside the window a pile of garments the tatters of which she could well imagine.

"Mr. Mead, you must come in from the cold and dry yourself," she said in bewilderment.

"I started nervously from bed to toe. "You don't know how many times I've wished you would say that, Miss Barbara. I've envied you with my whole heart. There I was, cold and wet, and no one was helping him along), and you, so far as the experts prove, were not in the least danger of any kind. Why, I'm not exactly a burglar, but I'm not exactly a gentleman, either, for I'm not having a just had to help. I didn't dare, for you would have thought me a thief."

"You darling!" Barbara forgot her shyness and took his hand and flung her arms around Philip's neck. "I'm so glad you're here laughing and chattering as if they had been years."

"We'll nominate you "master of the ceremonies," Philip suggested. "You now visit us as much as you please."

Barbara laughed, wondering why her throat was filled so full, and why she was leaping wildly and painfully.

"I never had a better one," she murmured. "We are ready for callers any time from now on."

Full stroke to the window. "I'll go as I came by the lighthouse. Good night, home to dream of the home beautiful. Good night, Miss Barbara."

Sales of the first six days of the Red Cross Christmas seals have not been up to the mark in Fayette county, Kentucky, according to Dr. Kyrene Bell, public health agency in Kentucky Tuberculosis Association, and Miss Anna Hayden Rose, Kentucky Tuberculosis Association, Red Cross Public Health nurse in charge of the Fayette county tuberculosis clinic.

Many stamps have been sold in the various counties in Northern Kentucky, according to Mrs. W. Kyrene, a newspaper woman of Lexington, Ky. Central Kentucky, too, reports sales, but many seals have been sold but not enough to make the state's quota unless there is considerably increased.

In Lexington the school children have sold the most seals, according to reports received for more than $1,000. Ernest B. Ellis, who is Assisting Chairman, J. A. Gordon there, offered prizes of $100 for the best seals sales-manship among the children, and the first day the school opened, was April 1. It is hoped to double the sales during this week, but if necessary, it will be continued until the quota of $130,000 is raised. Many more seals are expected to be sold this week.

WHY IS ILL HEALTH?

MANY CAUSES FOR A RUN-DOWN CONDITION

One of the Most Common is Anemia (General Bloodlessness)

"Ill health" is a relative term. Perfect health means good spirits and nervous ability, and need the services of the best doctors in the country.

Others are not so seriously affected.

If your ill health is a result of weak, watery blood (an exceedingly common condition) you can recognize it by any of the following signs or symptoms:

1—Poor color or pale complexion.
2—Tired-out feelings or general weakness.
3—Frequent headaches.
4—Loss of appetite.
5—Lack of spirits and ambition.
6—Loss of bodily strength.

The best remedy we know that will overcome the cause—Anemia or Bloodlessness, "Gude's" Pepto-Mangan is the one peculiarly valuable medicine for this purpose. It supplies the blood-cells with watery blood with the vital elements, known to put new life into the vital fluid, and thus it goes on its way to the good one gets from one's food to all parts of the run-down body. It builds the exhausted blood, the foundation of health and life.

"Gude's" Pepto-Mangan if you are "run-down," will certainly help you, when you have some deep-seated chronic disease resisting the physician's skill, for the name "Gude's" is on the package. Insist upon "Gude's" it is not Pepto-Mangan. For sale at all druggists.

Finish Question.

An official who was making up an assessment roll because of some recent improvement called at each house on the improved street to learn the names of the property owners. At one home he listened for a long time to the voice of a woman who was scolding a man in the rear of the premises.

"Who lives in this property?" he asked. "Why, I can't tell you," was the reply. "The old fool never knew and he doesn't know now. I've been trying to get a word in edgewise for the last hour."

INCREASES YIELD OF WHEAT

Experiment of Treating Seed Eliminates Smuts With Copper Sulphate.

An interesting experiment as to the effect of electrically treating seed wheat before sowing has been carried out at Sodaham Green, Elmstead, Kent, during the past season by W. J. Pledge of the Victoria Rose mills, Ashford, who, however, is not a miller. The variety of wheat chosen for the experiment was "red standard" and two adjoining plots were sown on November 13 and 14 with the rate of three bushels to the acre, the seed on one plot being electrically treated and on the other not. The land was treated with artificial manure in the usual way.

Recently the growing crops were inspected by a party including R. L. Dodd, lecturer on agriculture at the Wye agricultural college, and Mr. Kye, Kent.

The most striking difference between the two plots was noticeable, the wheat on the electrically treated portion being much more vigorous in growth and habit, and appearing, as far as the experts present could see to judge, a yield at least one-third greater than that of the untreated plot. There were evident signs of smut on the latter plot, but there was no significant fact that the other plot was entirely free from this disease. It was stated that the process of treating seed wheat by electricity is likely to become a very important factor in the development of agricultural crops and that great benefit to the farming industry may be confidently anticipated in the near future.

HEART OF THE DOUGHBOY

Experiences of War Taught Him to Tackle Every Problem From Practical Standpoint.

Most of our soldiers went to the other side young boys. They came back men hardened by fire and experience. They tell you that they have "figured out" the "heart of the doughboy" or that they have "solved a rule or two about the little cuss." The fact is that they were in that they have gone down to fundamentals and solved every problem from rock-bottom up.

It was with the understanding that the doughboy is a new man and a problem solver that Col. Arthur Woods, assistant to the secretary of war, laid the first plans of campaign for the war department's gigantic effort to get jobs for returned service men. "Find," he told his associates, "as our merry an employment idea. It is a new experiment in psychology. We want understanding employers to realize that service, right down to the ground, faces their problems squarely and take the plain pains to restore them to civilian life with as little friction and as much celerity as possible.

"There are returning home eager to get back to a little fearfully. We must bridge the gap between the old and the new and the new and the old. America's future lies in her youth. The men who defied fatalities and died patiently at home, must not be left to their fate after what they have done for us."

Is a community in which the citizens help each other in all the affairs of life. They patronize each other in a commercial way; help to market each other's products; assist each other in good and encouragement and friendly ways. Carlisle is one of such communities and is a part in business. The more business there is done in this county, the more chance each individual citizen has to prosper. Try to keep your town and county busy and you won't pay you in good money and feel well. There is a feeling that you have made a friend and helped your neighbor to prosper.

We manufacture "White Rose" flour. There is none better. We are glad to have your business. Buy it from us in your town and county to support your home industry and keep your trade in your town. We feel we are entitled to your patronage. Buy it from us.
