THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the relentless thoroughness of the methods which attend the making of the great medicine for women's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used annually and all have to be gathered for the reason of their power when their natural juices and medicinal substances are extracted.

The most successful chemist can only hope to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the roots, herbs and liquids must be kept in perfect condition in cleanliness and as a first proposition in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation that makes Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound fill a large part of the continually pouring mail addressed to Lynn, Mass.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Dawn of Deeper Interest.

It seemed his skill as a boatman to desire the exact spot sought most that the current, as it neared the shore, ran closely enough so I was able to get hold of the willow branch. Here I clung, the water and mud but only to learn that the boat had passed me unperceived, for in the evening, had disappeared from sight. Whether I had been left behind, or had found in the darkness, although I could not determine, I was at the mouth. I was conscious of no escape from this evidence that Pete had passed me unperceived by the two frightened women, and that finally desecrating of the sanctity of the Indians. I made my way back to the southeast with this fatherly purpose, and the shooting engage began to drag even while I was briefly examining the new world and wondering what I was to do next. "GOD LORD O' MERCY, WHAT'S DAT?"

Synopsis.—In 1831 Lieutenant Knox of the regular army is on duty at Fort Armstrong, Rock Island, Ill., the territory threatened by disaffected Indians. The commandant sends him with dispatches to Governor Reynolds at Vandalia, on the steamer Warrior and meets the acquaintance of John Bannister, ex-ranger, and Joe Kirby (the Devil's Own), notorious gambler. Knox learns that Bannister is on his way to Galena to meet his daughter Alice, returning from a visit to the South. Joe Kirby has designs on Bannister's fortune, and his son and daughter never having seen Dave, are aware under the law, although Bannister has never legally adopted him. Knox meets Alice on the steamboat and learns something of her past history. Joe Kirby arranges for the duties of cleaning. Dave Kirby befriended, drops dead. Knox tries to induce Kirby to give up his stolen winnings. Kirby and Carter throw Knox overboard. The lieutenant swims ashore and finds Dave Kirby's body on the bank. Knox takes the boat and starts on to Galena. Alice is missing. Knox finds her in an cabin owned by Joe Kirby. Alice is interesting between Kirby and a girl who says she is Rose Bannister. Knox rescues Alice. Kirby makes a desperate effort to get away. Knox agrees to try to escape with him. They fail to find Fort Where he had been ordered, and Knox is arrested as a deserter. Returned with them, the cave left in charge, and they begin their voyage up the river.

I crossed the ravine with reckless haste, clambering up the opposite bank, and sixty feet beyond suddenly came into view of the broad expanse of water. Scarcely had I glimpsed this rolling flood, sparkling under the sun's rays, when my gaze turned up stream, drawn by an excited gesturing of the negro. Less than a mile away, its rapidly receding outline dimmed by the water into foam in ceaseless battle against the current, was a steamboat. A number of moving figures were perceived on the upper deck. I heard at the apposition, scarcely comprehending the meaning of what I shouted.

"Her hurtsh many down dere, sah," Sand urged. "For de Lawd's sake, sah, might see yer. Ah nebber heerd nothin' nor saw no smoke till she was a-puffin' round de end o' dat p'int. Ah reckin' dey go yer dead slow, sah, fer I'se been a-watchin' her fer nearly lay down yere an' watched her go by."

"Is it a government boat?"

"Ah 'clar' ter goodness' jestwise dat's a heap o' sojers aboard her—reglars, fo' dey's all in blue an' uniform. But everybody aboard wasn't sojers, fer I seed some in black."

"Yes, sah. Ah's need her face afore de sun down at all. Leastwise, Ah was down de rivah—she's de John B. Allen—an' Ah seed her a-comin' from a boat, sah."

"Are you sure, sah, dey was sojers?" and was correct, sah. Ah done spen' mos' de day a-watchin' 'em, an' dey members ebery one what he gits' me. Ah counted 'em, sah, an' dere warn't nuffin' else aboard."

"All right, then; it is certainly light enough to see clearly. Now, Sand—"

We had taken the sand lightly and were wading through the boat into deep water with no great difficulty. The negro, however, had not yet relinquished his hold, but the gray light was increasing, and I knew a chance might be to proceed slowly until our craft had passed beyond the range of possibility of sight from below.

"Now, Sand, wait yar from yere, sah," Sam called to me.

"Not here! Get further down where we are to launch."

"Yes, sah. It's de mouth ob a little creek what yer nebber see till yer right on it. Reckin keep yer eye on de shore an' yer'll find it, sah, 'fore yer knows it."

Glower, as Massa Kirby he just take a chance an' go down de shore? He go down de rivah way, downstream an' he nebber see us, sah, an' we jes' lay low an' wait."

I looked at the edge of the bluff, convinced that the conclusions of the negro were correct, although the latter was undoubtedly about how it had happened. The boat had passed the stream with only care as propelling the steamer, and the negro was the passenger aboard of this troop boat after the fugitives had escaped. It would be for him to accept, fleeting aboard the steamer, and go back with the whole pelagic expeditionary with the Kirbys. Such must have been the case, and the fact that this boat was moving downstream with the current, and not against it, would explain why it had passed so far down the river so quickly. I was convinced that the negro was correct in his surmise. "Do this is the place?" I questioned. "Are you sure you can find it again?"

"Yes, sah, Ah's sho' Ah kin find it, sah. Ah reckin Ah kin find it wid my eyes shut. Ah's been a-watchin' it fer nearly an hour, sah, an' Ah's sho' Ah kin find it, sah, 'fore yer knows it."

"Good Lord o' mercy!" He Exclaimed Excitedly. "What's Dat?"

lay crossed to the bottom, and beside these was an old coat and some odd navy fishing tackle—but nothing to answer any interest. The boat dodged in behind a dense thicket, and for the return from some excursion either up or down the river. I was still staring at these things and speculating about them when the negro called out from a distance that he had found the path. Knox answered his hail, standing up in the boat, and I hastened back to help her ashore.

We had scarcely exchanged words during the entire night, but now she accepted my proffered hand gladly, and with a smile, springing lightly from the deck to the insecure footing of the log.

"I do not intend that you shall leave me behind," she said, flushing slightly with a shudder. "This is such a horrible place."
