"DER TAG" FOR BRITISH FLEET IS FULL OF HUMAN INTEREST

Eyewitness' Story of U-Boat Surrender Makes Greatest Naval Historical Incident a Thrilling Narrative of Retribution That Appeals Strongly—No Signs of Any Change in German Discipline.

New York.—The most remarkable element of this tremendous event, the incident, says a correspondent of the New York Sun who witnessed the surrender of the first of submarines by the thousand, is that those November morning when the grey ashes of the North sea rose creeping the first score U-boats to surrender, the British admiral I stood at the port rails of the destroyer, H. M. S. Melampus.

The setting for the last act of the terrible sea drama of this century was fitting—it still morning with the mists just breaking, a forlorn silver moon lingering, though the sun was beaming through in the east. Above our heads was a patch of greenish dawn sky, and the North sea lay with hardly a ruffle, gray with a hint of gold, like the patination of a hidden bronze.

A British light cruiser—one of the screen—with destroyers on either flank headed in the line of submarines. Two German hospital ships used as transports—the Sierra Cordoba and the Titania—followed them. One after another, long low pinnacles, some white, some dappled, some black, came out of the mist, their crews standing on deck like a black fence, no colors showing and no sound.

After some maneuvers the process of surrender began. Submarine after submarine, with others out of vision, fell into position behind the light cruiser and destroyers were picked out in white letters on their conning tower against the gray waters, Admiral Tyrwhitt's flagship, with the pennon flag in the chief position.

As one looked at the destroyer carrying the British admiral commander and crews who were to take over the German submarines the other ships seemed to form a circle, and every time one turned there was a British while ensign at the peak. The British ships, too, had stripped their ensigns to be especially watching the final scene.

Can Hear Wrong Side of Ledger

Somehow' Accounts of Three Youths Who Played Hallowe'en Pranks Didn't Seem to Balance.

Every time Hallowem comes 'round folks does Crenshbaw wife like to talk about the prank three young men played on an old couple in the neighborhood.

Three days afire Hallowem the old men and one of the perpetrators and said to him:

"Jake, you know I am not very strong any more. Now, some of the boys have been over and put it they've down there in the swamp. Will you be kind enough to put it out for me and John, like the decent chap he is, replied that he'd never until he had brought back the wagon.

The next day another of the trio was met by the old man, who said:

"Bill, you know I have spared the lady visit so strong as we used to be, and I'd be much obliged if you'd put it out for me." And the man to whom the request was addressed replied that he'd be glad to do it, but that he'd promised to help Jake Wheeler, and that choice cuts of beef also were promised him. The old man's request never was mentioned receiving the promise of the gifts to Mason came to the ears of the old man, who kept that there were two men in the neighborhood who had failed to keep their promises to help him. Then there were examined by Hugh McCarthy, Jake Wheeler and Bill Mason had helped the packers in their work of putting out the fires. The old man accumulated the information relating for a corpus delicti and had the trio arrested. He said Mason accumulated the information relating to the case and appeared at the agricultural appropriation bill, which must be left to the regular courts.

U. S. OWNERSHIP OF STOCK YARDS

OFFERS ONLY HOPE TO FARMERS AND STOCK RAISERS AGAINST MONOPOLY.

Henry Presents Data on Alleged Beef Trust—Sixteen Yards Handle 81 Per Cent of Business. Says Attorney General Overstep.n Urged.

Washington Newspaper Union News Service.

Washington.—Government ownership of the stock yards offers the only hope for farmers and stock raisers against the monopoly exercised by packers, Francis J. Henry, of the Senate Committee of Agriculture. He declared the various forms of leasing suggested in bills now pending in Congress would be about as effective as the bite of a mosquito on the hide of a rhinoceros. Henry founded the committee with a mass of data showing the control of the stock yards and packing industry in the control of five big packers, although there are 500 yards. He has been actively connected by a series of interlocking corporations.

The 16 largest yards do 81 per cent of which the big five have control carry on 85 per cent of the meat business of the United States, he said. If they control every move up to the government ownership and operation, Henry declared the various forms of leasing and the farmers would be able to "square deal" proposals. He declared revealing that the packers had made a profit of $1,000,000 in the city of Chicago, at about the time the Borland resolution was introduced in the senate to investigate the packers. Henry. Moon is the Republican leader in the house and was chairman of the special committee of the next House. Henry declared that Moon had introduced a horse valued at $150 by Henry Ford, and that Moon had declared that choice cuts of beef also were given him. The Moon committee ceased later admitted receiving the beef, Henry declared, but that the cost of the gifts to Moon came out of the packers' profits. The packers had purchased the meat and was proved from using by an auditor's report. Moon's income tax returns were examined by Hugh McCarthy, Jake Wheeler and Bill Mason had helped the packers in their work of putting out the fires. The old man accumulated the information relating for a corpus delicti and had the trio arrested. He said Mason accumulated the information relating to the case and appeared at the agricultural appropriation bill, which must be left to the regular courts.
