BEN SCOTT'S WAR STORY

of our impromptu but it seemed that as fast as we mixed them more came to the front and a gas attack seems to fall more on the front line than on the rear for an attack of this kind seldom gets back of the support trenches and usually gets limited to depth of mile and blind without living them.

After the armistice in the Lorette sector, we were relieved by the French and moved back to rest billets. Here we "were soon put side, worn-out French veterans who welcomed a respite in this quiet sector just as we would welcome a two weeks' furlough to a real American city. We were back of Camp Fiboulier at night and without incident. Here we stayed a week and although the officers supposed to be at "real camp," we were required to drill some each night and had to do trenches with duckwalk when we were not drilling. This was a very pleasant time. This trench digging was the most severe physical labor and in long preferred anything, even facing the Germans, to handling picks and shovels. We were glad to get out when orders came to pack up for departure, they were welcomed with a howl of delight by the entire regiment. It was the last week in March and we set out on our hike. It was a fine ride and we enjoyed the change which was known as the Marne Campaign. Here we were to take over from the French and it was to prove in the next sector that we were to endure our first real baptism of extensive shelling and the first extensive attack on the part of the enemy and had learned of our coming in advance and were preparing a hard time, the aim of which was to annihilate the Yankees. We were given a fair example of which would be in store for us and began the morale of the doughboys who were to follow in the days during the months to come. Of this we first met artillery and the people shall tell you of in the next chapter.

(TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK)

"We turned the tables on the Boche and sent some of his own medicine."

The Flow of Meat

Two-thirds of the live stock in the United States has to be raised in the West.

One-half of the consumers of meat live in the East.

In other words, most of the live stock is one or two thousand miles distant from most of the people who need it in the form of food.

Fifty years ago, when live stock was raised close to every consuming center, the country butcher could handle the job after a fashion.

But the job got too big.

Now millions of animals have to be moved hundreds of miles to millions of people. Somewhere on the way they have to be turned into meat.

The packers solved the problem. They set up plants where the "live haul" and the "meat haul" were in the right balance. They built up distributing systems—refrigerator cars, refrigerating plants, branch houses. They saved time, money and meat everywhere. The stockraiser benefited in better markets and higher prices; the consumer, in better meat and lower prices.

As the country grew, the packers had to grow, or break down. Because of its present size and efficiency, Swift & Company is able to perform its part in this service at a fraction of a cent per pound profit.
