Remember the Laundering.

When you are buying a new hat or neckwear do remember that one advantage of the lovely neckwear that we have nowadays is that it can be changed often enough so that the fellow coming about the neck is always immaculate. So buy neckwear that can be sent to the laundry without being ruined. Some of the prettiest bits of neckwear, it must be admitted, are too elaborate to be cleaned at the laundry, and some loses all the charm of freshness with its first cleaning.

PRESIDENT SENDS SHORT MESSAGE FROM EUROPE

Address to Congress Is Read by Regular Reading Clerk.

EXPLAINS HIS STAY ABROAD

Imperative Duty Makes Absence of Executive Necessary—Sole Object of Labor Unrest Dealt With Exhaustively—Suggestions for Domestic Legislation.

Washington, May 26.—For the first time in history a message from the president of the United States, called from Europe, was read to the congress at the opening session today.

"Gentlemen of the congress," it read, "I deeply regret my inability to be present at the opening of the extraordinary session of the congress. It still seems to be my duty to take part in the council of the peace conference and coordinate what I can to the solution of the innumerable questions of international right and justice. The gross itself; for they are questions which affect the peace of the whole world and from them, therefore, the United States cannot stand apart. I deemed it my duty to call the congress together at the time because it was not wise to postpone longer the meeting of the body best able to give the support of the government. Many of the questions with which we must deal in the settlement of the international relations and the settlement of the various questions of international right and justice are of such a character that they can only be handled by the representatives of the governments acting in conference with the league of nations. They cannot be handled by the national action and the enlightened public opinion of the several nations will therefore within each nation that must be relied upon to support the right members of the committee on labor in the senate and house of representatives and I am sure that we are to what means they shall use to secure the result which we all desire. I have been in pressing on, and if possible hasten, the work of legislation for the relief and reform.

Duty In Returning Soldiers.

"I am sure that it is not necessary for me to say that I regard it as of immediate and very practical question that we should now address our selves to the task of making definite the duty of the nation in the matter of returning soldiers to the industries from which they were called to the front. It would be premature to discuss them or to express a judgment about them before they are brought to their complete formulation by the agreements which it is being sought at the table of the conference. I shall hope to have the honor to address you in person upon these matters as soon as the arrangements have been made.

Rights of the Worker.

"The question which stands at the front of all others in every country is whether the present great unrest and the question of labor; and perhaps I may say in this connection that the whole engrossed in the consideration of it in terms which affect at once the citizen as I could at home and which affect the relations of employer and employee as they are not thought, because they are so fundamental, to affect them.

"By the question of labor I do not mean the question of efficient industrial production. The question of labor is to be obtained and made effective in the great processes of the world's productive population and winning success from those processes. I mean that much greater and more vital question which affects men and women who do the daily labor of the world in its shops and factories, in the intercourse in the conditions of their labor, in the hours of labor, in the safety of life in the conveniences and comforts and decencies of their lives and subsistence. How are they to be given their right part of the benefits and human hope?

"We cannot go any further in our present discussions. We have got to go further. We cannot fine our right relations to one another as employer and employee as an industrial community if we do not know what is the standard of the antagonistic instead of being partners. We cannot go further until we know what is the standard of the right and the just in the relations of employer and employee. How are they to be given their right part in the benefits and human hope?

"We cannot go any further in our present discussions. We have got to go further. We cannot fine our right relations to one another as employer and employee as an industrial community if we do not
