MUST TELL OF SUBSTITUTES

Law Orders Addition of Such in Branding Goods So Clearly Made Plain by Label.

Before the war the term "bread" was understood to mean bread made from ordinary wheat flour. During the war it might have meant bread containing on which to spread butter substitutes. But what does it mean now?

At the time the food administration relied that the law, as it stood, required the manufacture of bread, so much publicity was given the ruling that the chances of a purchaser being deceived into believing that the loaf he purchased home from the bakery as bread was made wholly from wheat flour were slim; and no objection was made under the food and drugs act to the labeling and sale of the product, conforming to the food administration's rulings as bread.

Now the question on the use of wheat flour in bread have recently been removed, any product now sold under or labeled with the unmodified term "bread" should, if brought within the jurisdiction of the act, be prepared from wheat flour only, says the United States department of agriculture, which enforces the food and drugs act. If substitutes or substitutes are used, their presence should be clearly stated on the label. The same principle applies in the case of crackers.

LEFT FOOT LARGEST.

Tour left foot is larger than your right—in 99 cases out of 100. Science explains it in many ways, but we accept the statement, which is that we all have a touch of left-footed longers. We lean against posts and fences and we do most of our leaning on the left foot; consequently, through the years it has grown to support the weight that the long right foot doesn't. The next time you buy shoes, have your left foot measured first.

Outfitting the Boys for School

The average small boy apparently will grant ever since he will not lose grace little thought as to wherewithal his trousers, so matter if he gets the fortunes of war may place his them on the right legs. Linen Handbags

Perhaps a remnant of the cross and accessory for knitting bags, there are many pretty handbags of linen and of linen and silk, which are made of two breadths of linen and linen knitting bags that are finished in color and decorated with beads and little puff tassels of some soft stuff, like chenille.

One, for instance, is heavy cream linen—quite heavy—and is embroidered with soft old blue. The handle is a string of big black jet beads, and at each of the three corners of the bag is a tassel of the jet, suspended from a big jet bead.

Light Linings.

Capes of white tricotine are lined with violet colored georgette or charmeuse.

A child's scarves is shortlived.

Crepe de Chine

Crepe de chine continues to be one of the most sought after fabrics for dress goods. It is said in all colors and weaves.

It is not one of the materials that will wear indefinitely, but every practical woman insist upon getting the best quality, for they know that it lasts for several seasons.

It is dark blue in favor for the basis of practical wardrobe. It is rarely used in black. In white and in the pastel shades it seems to be charming and especially adapted for evening wear.

Attractive Leghorn Hats.

Very girlish are the leghorn hats trimmed with a sash of wide frills or a wreath of flowers, with a long streamer ends. White taffeta petals covered the entire crown of one pale shaped leghorn that attracted my attention, while another had a swirling band of velvet.

Origin of Family Names

That the origin of family names can be readily traced is shown by a book published recently by an English scholar, in which he has successfully traced more than 6,000 names. He reaches the conclusion that fully half of them are derived from occupations. Then follow those derived from the names of men who lived a long time ago and are gradually forgotten.

Two of the four farming sections of the county were organized for the work with 50 per cent of the farmers and business men cooperating. As a result, 85 per cent of the ground squirrels on the land treated with poison bait were killed. The results were so striking that practically every farmer in these two sections is expected to cooperate this spring.

The other two farming sections have recently been organized, so that this

BRAZIL: Melting Pot Like the United States

BRAZIL is of special interest to the people of the United States because it is in the air that America and Brazil are destined to be closer friends. It is interesting to us to know that Brazil is a melting pot of the nations, a melting pot of the nations.

"Having in mind the close relations which have existed for many years between our two countries it is not surprising that the entrance of the United States in the great European conflict should have been followed by a decree on Brazil's proceedings. To the credit of Brazil be it said, nothing over stood between the two countries in the way of their full and cordial cooperation. The recital of the causes which led to the severing of diplomatic relations with Germany and the adoption of effective measures against her activities in Brazil, as well as the declaration of war, are all recorded in the message received by his multaneously with the declaration of war. For the first time in the history of the country the Brazilian congress, by unanimous vote, authorized the president to declare war, and to employ the military and naval forces of the nation in such manner as he might deem necessary to prosecute the war with energy and vigor. The people of Brazil, with one accord, gave their support to the measures taken by the government, and the declaration of war was followed by the most enthusiastic demonstrations throughout the country.

"Brazil's participation in the war, though not active, was nevertheless effective. Besides the protection afforded to the Brazilian coast by the navy, the Brazilian government sent a military mission to the front, which was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the French people and army. The Brazilian mission was composed of officers of the highest rank, and was headed by Gen. Napoleon Tasso Fragoso, chief of the general staff of the army. The mission was received by President Poincaré, and was the guest of honor at many functions given by the French government and people. Gen.
