Mr. Herbert M. Gessner writes from his home in Berlin, N. H.:

I had stomach trouble over ten years; kept getting worse. I tried everything for relief but it came back worse than ever. Just half I got awfully bad; could not get light bad bread and tea. In January I got so bad that when I would eat would sour and boil; my teeth would be like chalk. I got awful sick. I grew afraid I was in a dreadful condition. One day I read about EATONIC and how it cured others and sent for a box of it. In six days my stomach was so I was able to work at 6 p. m. I took another box of it and began to feel like myself. Well, it was three months gone, I felt fine and when it was gone I had no pains. Will say as an assistant boy but I have felt the pain but a few times since. I have taken only one box and I know it is more stomach tonic now. Now I write to tell you how thankful I am for the benefit of EATONIC. I feel like a new man. I eat what I like, don't speak of water, and weigh 154 lbs.

Harrassing the Sure Aim

That the rays of the sun can be used for curing many ills diseases and that sun baths are beneficial to those who are in perfect health is well known. The problem of utilizing this agency in northern countries where the hours of sunshine are few has been solved, he claims, by a British doctor. M. J. de Thone.

His invention consists of a revolving cabin, combined with a huge lens for concentrating the sun's rays upon the enclosed patient's body. This lens is composed of 300 lens boxes used in the construction of Quinoper, France.—Popular Science Monthly.

Home.

As Tarzan of the Apes hurried through the trees the discordant sounds of the battle between the Apes and Waziri reached his ears, and he knew more distinctly upon his sensitive ears, accustomed to but few sounds, the plight of the human element of the fierce encounter below.

At last the glade of the camp fire shone plainly through the intervening trees and a moment later the great figure of the ape-man passed upon an overhanging bough to look down upon the bloody scene of carnage below.

His quick eye took in the whole scene with a single comprehending glance and stopped upon the figure of a woman standing forlorn a great line across the carcass of a horse.

The woman was crouching to spring as Tarzan discovered the tragic scene. Numa was almost beneath the branch upon which the ape-man stood, and he asked and received. There was not even an instant's hesitation upon the part of the lion—to one so fleet enough he had not even paused in his swift progress through the trees—but with the ferocity and the courage and the cunning of the beast he sprang upon the unsuspecting victim from the rear.

The lion was forgetting his own peril—everything save the woman—in the lust of this atrocious revenge.

But as the sinewy form leap to the shoulder of the lion, hurling him backward, the woman turned with a distinctly battering ram. She saw the lion she had feared upon her back, saw the steel upon her, and in the instant she recognized the deliverer who she had once cried from the charge of a mad bull elephant, and with little further hesitation threw herself into the super arms of Tarzan of the Apes.

As an ordinary mortal might have done, the lord of the jungle would have been hurled backward by the force of the impact, but Tarzan of the Apes was not as other men, and he stood firmly upon his feet, though the woman clung to him with the strength of a frightened animal.

Unnoticed, Tarzan passed from the body of the Abyssinian, who had met his fate in conflict followed him down into the jungle until Numa, the lion, was duly obliterated in entirety.

Then, as he spoke words he had left Werper west the ape-man, joy in his heart, knew that he had not misjudged the woman he had dropped so unceremoniously into the arms of Numa, the lion, and that she was indeed a woman worthy of the name.

The blacks who had witnessed the fight with the lion in which Tarzan of the Apes had killed Numa, the lion, with his naked hands, had been awed by the spectacle, and they were now prepared to follow him to the ends of the earth. Even the Waziri, who had been forced by the super intelligence of the white man to accept him as their leader, had come to look upon him with a certain degree of awe, and they were now ready to follow him into the inner side Tarzan's mind, as he thought of the matter, was the better part of the work in hand, and that was to get the party of Slave Drivel and the seven white captives out of the country of the cannibal Waziri as quickly as possible.

Tarzan of the Apes had not a set of rules and some of the medieval additions to the code of chivalry had never reached his ears. The cannibals with whom he had lived in the fastnesses of the Kerchak, the great anthropoid ape, had no conception of doing unto others as they would be done by, and Tarzan, having had no training in such matters, had not undertaken exciting needs every day of his life to have developed any pressing chivalrous cleaning processes, and so he had no more scruples about his lower savage. Having found that the Waziri were not to be trusted, he had decided whether those to whom he had given his word or not, and so he had given his word to the cannibals that he would not attempt to escape.

"The cause of it."

"Why is it that you never see a man with a pair of suspenders on the lines that forged them was the desire to be free?"

"Because they couldn't afford it," said Tarzan, "Daniel and the others. The gold is gone and the jewels are gone, Jane; but we have each other and the World—we have love and loyalty and friendship. And what are gold and jewels when have?"

"If only poor Mugambi lived," she replied. "And those other brave men who have sacrificed their lives in vain endeavor to protect me."

Enamel is baked on sheet iron in electric ovens, and the process of electric heating for enameling stoves is said to be more satisfactory and economical than the old method of using coal.
