ROMANANCE BY PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER I
 "The boy, who was walking toward the west door of the cathedral, was a stranger to me. He had the face of a stranger, and his eyes were set in a way that made me think he was not of the same race as the rest of the people of the cathedral. He was a young man, and his hair was black and his eyes were dark. He was wearing a dark suit and a white shirt, and he was walking with a purposeful stride. I saw him for the first time when he came into the cathedral, and I saw him again when he came out. He was a stranger to me, and I was curious to know who he was and what he was doing in the cathedral."

A certain amount of British air force is being sent to the east coast of the United States. This is the first time since the beginning of the war that the British have sent a large force of aircraft to the United States. The aircraft are being sent to the east coast of the United States for the purpose of training the United States pilots in the use of the latest type of aircraft. The British are sending a large force of aircraft, including fighters, bombers, and transport aircraft. ## ONE SENTENCE WAS ENOUGH

John Lawrence, 30-year-old...
 "I had no time to think of anything else. I was so busy with the one sentence that I had just heard. It was a sentence that would change my life. I had no time to think of anything else. I was so busy with the one sentence that I had just heard. It was a sentence that would change my life."

800 Russian Children Saved by American Red Cross

When the Russian Revolution broke out in 1917, the American Red Cross began to help the Russian people. One of the first things the Red Cross did was to help the Russian children. There were about 800 Russian children who had been orphaned or abandoned during the revolution. The American Red Cross took care of these children, and many of them have been sent home to Petrograd. The Red Cross has also helped to rebuild the Russian economy and to provide food and clothing for the Russian people.
