Unearth Church of 4th Century

Valuable Research Work Is Started Under British Rule in Palestine.

SHRINES WILL BE RESTORED

Fortress of the Crusaders May Become Memorial to Lord Allenby—Excavations in Garden of Gethsemane Started Last Spring.

London.—According to a Liverpool correspondent of the Times the discovery of a very early Christian church in the Garden of Gethsemane has directed attention to the valuable work which is being carried on in Palestine under the direction of the newly formed department of antiquities. Sir Herbert Samuel recognized from the outset of his career as high commissioner that the whole world was anxious that the greatest care should be taken of the monuments and every facility offered to those investigating the history of the Holy Land. He called to his aid the director of the British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem, who is now busier than ever after strenuous work which he has had the gratification of seeing bear fruit.

Excavations in the Garden of Gethsemane were begun by the Franciscans in the spring of last year, and they discovered a church of the fourth century. In digging the foundations for a new building on the spot they discovered traces of a much earlier church on a slightly different site. They duly received permission to explore this earlier building, which proved to be a church of about the same dimensions, and one of the first monuments to Christianity in Palestine. The whole of the outside wall can be traced, together with the two doorways which supported the pilasters, and three spans of the original one have also been found. Here and there are well-preserved, though small, remains of the original mosaic floor.

The Franciscans have undertaken to preserve these remains in such a way that they will be permanently visible; and a wooden roof is to be put on so as to be designed to inclose the old church. Above this will be built the Basilica of the Agony, which will be the most beautiful Modern buildings extant, is here. The earlier development of the Christian kingdom will be traceable by systematic excavation from the fort of Ramah upward along the Ridge of Ophel as far as the site of the Temple.

There are many interesting buildings of Moslem and Crusading date, not only in Jerusalem, but scattered throughout the country. One of the most impressing of the Crusaders' fortresses is that of Belvoir, which, on the river between Haifa and Jaffa. The site is the plow from which Richard Coeur de Lion finally evacuated his forces. It is a wonderful and imposing ruin, and the department of Palestine is hoping its plans for the systematic preservation and opening up of the monument. It has been suggested that its restoration would be a fitting memorial to Lord Allenby, and though no decision has been arrived officially in this direction, the appropriateness of such a memorial is generally admitted.

Promising sites, dating further back than the earlier history of Palestine before the Jews, are also awaiting examination. Among these is the ancient fortress of Megiddo, famous as far back as the time of the Pharaohs, and an American university is proposing to make a complete examination of this site. Another is Beisan, which was at the junction of the Vale of Jezreel, with the Valley of the Jordan in a commanding position, aptly described by George Adam Smith as "the key to Palestine." This site is also marked by imposing mounds, which have kept from a series of attempts to dig them up by curio hunters and dealers. It is very satisfactory to be able to say that a second university is about to join in the work of excavation, and is arranging to excavate here.

Grotto of Ascalon Opened.

A very interesting discovery was made at the close of last year at Ascalon, where the remains of an ancient Jewish synagogue, having a mosaic panel floor with an inscription, and Hebrew characters worked into the pattern, have been found. The excavation of this is to be completed in the very near future, and certain objects representing the French school of archaeology, the Ecole Biblique, and vigorous Jewish archeological society to make a preliminary examination of various sites of interest in the Holy Land, including Jericho, Caesarea and Tiberia. The latter is proving to be of particular interest, and attention was directed to it early after the war by the discovery of the ancient fortress of Magdala, famous as far back as the time of the Pharaohs and the ancient university is proposing to make a complete examination of this site.

HOUSE WARNED THAT BURDEN WILL BE INTOLERABLE

CUT IN APPROPRIATIONS BY CONGRESS VITAL IN FILING DEFICIENCY MEASURE.

Party To Be Swamped In 1922 Elections If Republicans Levy Tax on Gasoline, Autos—Cost of Government Must Be Kept Less Than Five and One-Half Billions.

Washington—Warning the House that the burden now carried by the taxation would not roll back without a slump and appealing for reduction in government expenditures, Chairman Jas. W. Good, of the Appropriations Committee, declared that the time had come to call a halt. "Let's announce the big for comprehension by the average man and woman who elected the members on Mr. Good, in dramatic fashion, told of vast sums expended and of the growing appeals for more, and he insisted that the appropriation bills be framed before March 4, so that the framers of a new tariff might know the amount of cash they must raise. He would have to patch the nation's coal, declaring that the country and the nations must be cut before taxes can be slashed. Mr. Good declared that appropriations for the year beginning July 1 will be $5,000,000,000 and that virtually the sum recommended in the supply measures now before congress.

Mr. Good's plea for Government economy was followed by Chairman Fordney bill for the present fiscal year carrying a deficit. Democratic members of the committee declared that the bill was "padded" and Representative Garrett, Democrat, declared direct appropriations for the year totaled $5,000,000,000. Republican Chairman Mondell, declared direct appropriations for the year beginning July 1 will be $5,000,000,000 and that virtually the sum recommended in the supply measures now before congress.

To Restore Ancient Building.

It is to be hoped that on the completion of the restoration steps will be taken and the means forthcoming to preserve the ancient building, and which a great portion of the masonry is in a very precarious condition, and is liable to collapse in the event of a bad earthquake. Should it be possible scientifically to reconstruct the building it will prove a unique addition to the wonders of Palestine.

The chief feature of the last year's the work of excavation has been the opening of the south wall of the city, which has been undertaken by the Palestine Exploration fund. The results are not yet published, but are of remarkable interest. A very fine building of Roman date—namely, a massive temple of Jupiter—has been found, and probably the Temple of the Forum, or City Gardens, one of the wonders discovered. The columns of this building are 40 feet high each, and the capitals three tons. The whole structure, both floors and walls and ceiling, is entirely of marble. It is to be hoped that the building may be preserved in one of the Greek islands and reconstructed there, as suggested by Anexion during the first or second century of the Christian era. Also was found of a secret well mentioned by Josephus in the history of Jerusalem, a remnant of the early sacred lake of the famous pools of Bethesda.

Anexion was the home of Herod the Great, and here also he built the aqueduct that he greatly embellished the city with fountains, though the water in time be possible to recognize these, and also the objects described by Josephus as "the Hippicus tower, measuring over a yard square and 40 cubits in height, the whole in alabaster, possibly part of a large statue of the time of Herod, referred to the scientific world is the effect of the Dead Sea. The Dead Sea fossil is making to recover some tendency to the weather of the Philistines, their civilization, and it is believed that the latest excavations there may find have been located, as well as the prophets Obadiah and Nahum.

BURIED IN SHIFTING SANDS

Englishwoman Interred in Treacherous Mud Where Live Horse Had Perished Years Before.

Located at the entrance to the Strait of Dover, the deadly Goodwin sands would appear to be the last place in the world that any one would select as a burying ground. Treacherous, shifting and with a record of having been responsible for the loss of scores of ships and hundreds of lives, these sands are steadily avoided like the plague by all but the hardy fishermen who recently died at Broadstairs, England, made it a condition in her will that her body be buried in the sands, and not in an English churchyard.

While the reason for this strange desire to be interred in an unmarked grave was not made clear in Miss Lee's will, neighbors who recalled a romance in her early life stated that the sands had been responsible for the loss of the life of her fiance 30 years before, and that, despite the fact that the Goodwins are treacherous, she had never in the intervening years failed to visit the sands every summer.

When upon her deathbed the spinster informed her friends that they would find a strange request in her will, she declined to state what it was. She merely added that she believed that her wishes be carried out. "I particularly desire," she added, "that no attempt be made to mark my last resting place, though there will be no chance for that," she concluded with a faint smile. When the will was read it was apparent that the placing of a marker would be impossible, and indeed, be an impossibility, for even a few days after the burial it is hardly practicable for lightkeeper to find the exact spot where the body was interred. Miss Lee's wish has been respected by the sands, according to local gossip, and it has been lost completely a century before.

"When piazza die, they give off a large amount of secretion. If 500 peas boiling in a pot all died at the same moment they would give off a vapor sufficient to electrocute the cook." Usually it comes in winter and blossoms in the spring. But if it gave a dose of chloroform in winter it blossoms on awakening from the chloroform sleep.

J.—Alleged violation of the prohibition law in the dining room of the Essex County Country club, one of the most exclusive clubs in the state, was charged in an affidavit filed in Federal court here by Attorney General Clement L.
