CALIFORNIA RAISIN GROWERS SET EXAMPLE

Fowell and his followers. The growers had no money, but they were de put up their personal notes, for a term of years, and the bankers the Monterey and his associates agreed to handle them by taking the note of the association supported by them-notes of the individual growers, discounting the associations notes at fav with the support of these growers notes. That is if they took a scrap of growers' notes for $1,000, the association would issue a note for $1,000 and attach the growers' notes as collateral and the bank would discount for $1,000 at the current normal rate of interest for six months, and soon on discounting a note until they had money in from the crop to pay the growers' notes. They decided they would go on that plan first.

They next doubled out to associate variety to form a big packing plant, but to choose the varieties of grape standing reasons. They selected Muscat because it was unique when you can't sell a product you without having the price broke completely. When we get a small surprise we are satisfied to take the bankers. We must enter on the game with the bottom up-permit to give any grower the right of other fellow. Instead of an inflex-ity in the hands of the men who own the packing plants, we want to pro-is no control of the man who owns the land, who have everything to the packing plant.

After they got the contracts they selected trustees. The trustees chose all the directors. The directors were all raisin growers, and they were a good safeguard to the growers. Each director was a raisin grower, and he raisins were in the same pool as their of every other member of the association. They couldn't put a good price for their stuff without getting it for the smaller fellow in the whole group.
They couldn't put a charge on the other man's raisins without putting it on themselves.

The first thing these directors had to do was to perfect financial conditions. So that time $1,500,000 had been subscribed by the hundred thousand dollars, or a fraction over, was subscribed by the bankers and merchants and the friends of the movement. That was in 1903.

Then the growers met and authorized by the growers—that was the first time the growers knew they didn't have the money. But they did succeed on that occasion in getting all the money they needed to put up the packing plant and a margin for the first year over that they had a guarantee of 6 per cent on their money.

Some California.

They picked out as their manager Mr. Matlock. You know in California we think Mr. "John Doe" is a good name. "John Doe" and "Richard Roe" stand for all the Smiths and Joneses in the country. A man is a "John Doe" or a "Richard Roe" until he has made a name for himself.
Matlock was a good "John Doe" and a good "Richard Roe" when he came to Fresno. He was not known as a raisin man, and in addition it was a handicap to be known as a raisin man in raisin times the growers of that section of California. They had gotten poorer for the raisins and they had gotten poorer for the raisins, and in spite of larger crops received less money.

They cropped on and up until they had the High Five raisin crop, and then they always gave a complete statement of the condition of affairs in California—evidently discouraged and disheartened. Then they had a raisin crop and raisin sale, they gave a statement of the condition of affairs, and they got nothing but more discouraged.

So our experts. So got a man in to have himself a raisin expert. The man who was to be manager of the raisin association was to be the man with the campaign. "What is

It was not simply a question of money it was a question of a higher standard of living and all that means to modern social life. That is why all the elements of the community joined in, everybody felt that his interests were bound up with those of the grower.
They put on a real campaign. Rower was the leader. The bankers and merchants got into line, and the growers followed. By the time they finished with the campaign they had a little over 51 per cent of the entire raisin acreage tied up tight under three-five-

The Rest Contract.

They drew up a draft of the con-contracts under which it was agreed that the growers would sign with the growers. Under this contract the growers agreed to deliver to the association the total of his crop, all the raisins he produced for a term of five years. Then the association would pay to the grower at grade times it would find acquires them into town.
That is, it would separate them by grades within those grades. Then it would sell all the raisins—of each grade—and all the raisins from a county-to-pound basis ence in quality and local tions. They might put them out on the Atlantic coast and locate other and then all they would do is the same as if they were in Fresno. That is the amount he put into any grade, of course, and the quality of the raisins sold. Then the association would charge off the cost of handling of doing business, advertising and so on, and the balance would be paid to the grower.

Then they started in to advertise themselves and their product. They had a big job on their hands. They had to sell one of at least three-fourths of the raisins produced in California. They started in to do it.

Madison said: "Let's get together."

Madison said then he was directly interested in the sale of 40 per cent of the raisins
