She Leads 37,000 Red Cross Nurses

THE FAMOUS OLD SPRING AT THE BLUE LICKS

(From an old wood cut.)

MISS CLARA D. NOYES, who returned only a few months ago from an extensive tour of the Near East and Eastern-wrecked nations of central and eastern Europe, will go there the first week abroad, further lately among the hundreds of thousands of destitute children who are in dress at the second annual convention of the American Red Cross, of which she is honorary director of nursing service. The convention will be held in Columbus, O., Oct. 4-6.

Miss Noyes is the head of the entire nursing personnel of Red Cross nurses, now numbering over 37,000.

Fulfillment of its obligation to the American people will be one of the main problems under discussion at the convention of the Red Cross in Columbus, O., Oct. 4-6.

Many franchises which had their inception overseas are expected to be renewed when nurses who saw service with the American forces in the World War and veterans of some of the other branches of the great conflict meet in Columbus, O., Oct. 4-6, for the convention of the American Red Cross.

The annual convention of the American Red Cross at Columbus, O., Oct. 4-6 is necessary in the world.

Revelations of Science.

Among other interesting facts that have been determined by the tireless investigating scientists is this: That the skin on the palms of the hand is normally twenty times as thick as the skin on the eyelid. The palms of the working men are even thicker.

LIKE THE KNIGHTS OF OLD

Plans Were Going Forward to Outfit Our Daughters for Fighting the Hun in France.

Plans that American war armor attires were perfected to make the Yankee daughter in France more unclassically, scientific, and safer were developed in the had by the sudden armistice, according to the Ladies' Home Journal, the ex-soldiers' magazine conducted by the former editorial council of the Stars and Stripes. The armor attire of the engineering division of the sub same department were working on a portable fortress that could carry a machine-gun bullet at 150 yards and a daughter Hegewisch were around the body for use in attack. The council had made the plans and sent to France look like a cross between the armor of Richard the Lion Hearted and the Yale goal line for a touchdown.

The Home Secretary says: "The records of A. E. F. hospitals show that seven out of eight of our wounded soldiers were lamented by fragments of shell and other missiles which even this armor plate would have kept out.

"We in this country started to work on the theory that it was possible to produce body armor which would not be difficult to carry and which would resist the impact of a machine-gun bullet at fairly close range.

"There was developed by the engineering division of the committee supervised a body defense, including a light front and body plates, weighing altogether only nine and one-half pounds. The plates were made of sponge rubber. One lot of these was manufactured and sent over to France for test a heavy steel plate with thigh guards, weighing twenty-seven pounds, capable of stopping machine-gun bullets at 150 yards.

The Tank did not take kindly to the idea of body armor. Or it might more aptly be said that the Tank did not take kindly to the idea of still more tanks. "All in the tanks" was shouted when asked how he liked his proposed winter suit.

Dig for Egyptian Temples.

An appeal for funds to carry on the excavation of Egyptian antiquities on a larger scale than ever before contemplated was sent out by the Egyptian Exploration Fund from its American headquarters at Boston, the New York Times states. About $10,000 is needed to reopen the excavation of ancient civilization where many were left by the sudden death of Dr. Flinders Petrie.

"The most important undertakings are the clearance of the eleventh and eighteenth dynasty temples of Deir el Bahari, called by the Egyptians of Thebes, and at Abydos, the cleaning of the temple of the seventeenth dynasty erected by Merenptah, Pharaoh of the Exodus, and richly decorated by Seti I with texts from the 'Book of the Dead.' The plans already have been made by the war, employed 600 fellaheen (native workmen) and 100 donkeys, and the fund is the one remaining undisturbed position of importance.

Fit Yourself to Conquer.

You must see the rainbows in the fortune if you would be a builder who touches men. You must forget the towering cloud and impending storm. Their present hindering will but swell the tide flowing your way later. There's something godlike in the enthusiastic soul. Enthusiasm paints its own stars in the mental firmament and then draws them down to earth. You might as well try to pull the sun from the sky as to pull the youth who is filled to enthusiasm. His life is too luminous to be held down by oppressions. Inductive anxiety makes him a scarce gist wins the crowds to him. And when he feels the operation of nothinking men he will rise to greater heights and be thrifle those who listen with the story of his wrongs. What he has done is more than make him true saintlie and fix him to conquer.—Grit.

The Cynical Actress.

At least one manager believes that the actress should lead a pure and simple life.

"Cynical, disillusioned actresses are not in demand," he said at dinner. "I remember an actress of some years ago who had set down hard in a part I had given her.

"'Now, Jane,' I said the morning of her six-fifth scene, 'all critics say you don't close half enough scenes in the scene where your husband leaves you for the other woman.'

"The cynical, disillusioned creature gave a hearty laugh.

"'Oh, I don't, can't I?' she sneered. 'Wait, look here, Mr. ——, I've had my husbands leave me, never to return, and I guess I know how such scenes ought to be shown in such circumstances as well as anybody.'"—London Opinion.

CHEERFUL APRON DRESSES CONTINUE TO BE PRETTY

ALL the gracefulness and charm which manufacturers have given to frocks and aprons for housework, that of "apron dress" is the most fitting. It describes exactly the one in which these garments are put, for they serve both as dresses and as aprons. A great deal of attention is given to designing them and they are among the most notable of all things ready-made. Therefore manufacturers see to it that they have good, their colors pleasing, and the materials used in them of good practical use.

The apron-dresses for fall show no new departures in style, but their predecessors are giving more attention to fit and to attractive finishing touches. The fabrics used are the same we are familiar with—fast-color percales in quiet patterns and fancy patterns, checked and plaid ginghams, chambrays, linen crashes and chambrays. In the percales there are dark or light grounds with all-over stripes and figures. White and solid colors in suitable cottons, picket and other staple, pretty buttons with a fine finish to them, are used to finish the decorations used spiritually on garments which are intended to be worn.

It would seem that there is small chance for much variety of design in garments that employ so few kinds of material, but it turns out to be otherwise. There are so many patterns in the materials used, so great variety in the shaping of collars, and so many ways in the piecing of each simple fundamental design, and the management of the fabrics, that a reputation agrees can be presented in the picture; it is output pursue in the strip-on style and the simplest design, but in typical of many of the kind.

The "Green Mountain Boys."

The "Green Mountain Boys," was a name assumed by a body of soldiers from Vermont who fought in the Revolutionary war. They captured Fort Ticonderoga in the battle of Bennington. They were organized originally by Ethan Allen to oppose the claims of New York to the territory of Vermont. The Green Mountain Boys were fond of it to set that Vermont be regarded as a state. This was accomplished until 1791, when Vermont was admitted as a state.

Salvaging Grain From Elevator That Blew Up

The work of salvaging the grain that was blown up in the world's largest grain elevator, in Chicago, opened by the Armour company, has just been finished. The work of removing out the elevator, which it would take at least a year, was finished in four months. Blowers were run out from two sides of the elevator, and to the railroad tracks and one to the canal where the boxcars were loaded.

Danube Is Open to All Nations

Internationalization of Famous River Completed by Action of Interested Allied Powers.

BARRIER AND BATTLEGROUND

Danube Has Long Been Chain Upon Which Nations and History Have Vied With Each Other to Hang Trophies.

Washington.—The completion of the internationalization of the Danube river, the control of which was one of the interested allied powers, was announced today by the state department on the occasion of the inauguration of the European headquarters of the International Geographic society at Geneva, Switzerland, descriptive of the famous river.

"From the Black sea to Galatz," the news says, "over a course 1,800 miles in length, the Danube has now been a chain upon which romance and history have vied with each other to hang interesting traditions and occurrences. Geographically, the river has its source in the Black Forest of Germany, and flows through Austria, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Bulgaria, Rumania and Russia, and empties into the Black sea through the Sulina mouth.

"Vienna, historically the lowest point on the river that was ever known as the Danube, and receives the waters of the Inn, with which system the motto 'Bi ter ego' has been associated, and on its banks decorate the walls of the Hofburg palace. Then comes the Budapest, still militant, still haughty in the consciousness of its long and seemed a gruesome toll.

"Budapest's Buda and Pest flanked from Roumanic forties across a broad and sluggish stream to control the key to Asia and Constantinople; its industry stopped, can do little to earn the food it needs. During the war, more than five shore, and although the Volga exceeds its rival in length, and although the Danube from Ulm to Budapest, still militant, still haughty in the consciousness of its long and seemed a gruesome toll.

"The casual observer, Budapest is the same proud city as of old. The fine parliament building and the imposing palace on the heights across the river, where Admiral Horthy now lives, remain as attractive as before the war. The upper river is still picturesque, with castles on the hills and rowboats in which charming women and steamers one do their work.
